How THEY LIVED ON $12 70-The husband and wife who recently gave their living expenses for one month, in a flat of six rooms, as $12 70, were interviewed by an Oregonian reporter, yesterday, as follows:

"We planned to live during the month of November, when we spent $12 70 on current expenses, as well as we knew how, without being extravagant. During the month we had two turkey dinners, and on Thanksgiving day we entertained two guests. Then we bought such articles as Spring chickens and sweetbreads. We paid the milk dealer 5 cents more than the ordinary market price for eggs so as to ensure eggs being fresh, and of first quality. In cooking, we did not use ordinary cooking butter on hand, but the best table butter. The man of the house personally selected vegetables, fish, poultry, etc. We also had such delicacies as Toke Point oysters of course if we had included some spent on clothing, dresses, charity, the newspapers, telephone, and street-car fare, the original sum of $12 70 would have been materially increased.

NO TRACE OF WOMAN WHO JUMPED FROM STEEL BRIDGE-No trace has yet been discovered of the body of the German woman who jumped from the steel bridge Wednesday evening, and there are no clues as to her identity. That the woman had undergone some trouble is generally believed. Her husband, a Gatekeeper, describes her as being in an excited condition. Inquiry at the morgue and the police station fails to throw any light on the situation and the woman's name is not on the list of the fortunate woman's identity. Her suicide was premeditated and deliberate, and the theory has been advanced that domestic trouble was the cause. The case is being investigated by the police.

to $17,000 annually. Allowing 50 years for the life of a steel dock, and its depreciation will be $700 per annum, to which being added the difference of interest at 4 per cent, amounts to $600, making the difference of investment in favor of the steel dock $600. Besides, we will have a dock which will last for a long time after our wooden dock has gone to the "bone yard." By all means let this matter be thoroughly investigated, and let us make no mistake in starting.

Christmas shoppers have universally decided that for bright, new and snappy bargains and for the largest and best assortment of the newest ideas in jewelry, silver, cut glass, Tiffany glass, opera glasses, umbrellas, fine leather, that the proper store to trade at is at the G. H. Heitkemper Co.'s jewelry store at 236 Morrison.

These on salt water. Salt water is a natural preserver of wood, in proof of which I need only refer to some of the old frigates built a century ago, and still in existence. The only real enemies that wood has in salt water are the termites and foul air. Wood will rot even in salt water between wind and water, but not as fast as it would in fresh water. On the other hand, steel will corrode and pit in salt water very readily, especially if exposed to hot, damp, salt air. Now the conditions of fresh water are reversed, as any seaman knows. Wood will commence to rot after the second year, and after 10 years even the heaviest timbers will require renewal, and after 15 years little of the original dock will remain.

I have had some personal experience in the building of drydocks on fresh water. To guard against the rotting of wooden vessels which are built in fresh water, the timbers are treated with preservative, but this is not practical in a floating drydock. In the design of the dock to which I believe Mr. Corbett refers repairs are practically impossible. The center line of braces, on which the life of the dock depends, are butted together in a solid mass six feet deep. The braces and arch are interlocked and bolted together, and repairs to this, the most vital portion of the dock, are out of the question. If we consider that the upper half of the bottom tanks is, so to speak, between wind and water, always damp and exposed to the heat from the effects of the sun striking it, no better means for rot could be devised.

I understand that bonds will be issued to pay for the proposed drydock, these bonds to mature in 30 years. I am satisfied, without being classed as a calamity howler, but from actual knowledge and experience, that a wooden dock will have decayed long before the bonds become due. One of the oldest ships in our Navy, the Michigan, still in use on the Great Lakes in fresh water, was built in 1847. It has outlived three complete wooden upperworks, and her iron hull is still in good condition today. Wooden docks and wooden boats are conceded to have a life of about 15 years on the Great Lakes, and I do not know of a single instance where an iron vessel has given out from corrosion on fresh water. At this point it might be well to mention that a drydock built in New York would have perhaps 20 times as great an earning capacity as a drydock built in Portland. Therefore, they are justified in rebuilding often where we would not be. If I have succeeded in showing the reason why even today the first cost induces people on salt water to build wooden docks, I will now undertake to show it from a financial point of view. Supposing that we really need a dock of 10,000 tons lifting capacity and capable of taking vessels drawing 25 feet of water, which by the way is seven feet more than the largest wooden floating dock now built will accommodate, the cost of such a dock should be about $350,000. I will guarantee to design and build a composite dock, where all structural and under-water parts are metal, for about $300,000, and furnish bonds that it will operate successfully. Allowing 15 years of life to the wooden dock, the depreciation amounts to $17,000 annually. Allowing 50 years for the life of a steel dock, and its depreciation will be $700 per annum, to which being added the difference of interest at 4 per cent, amounts to $600, making the difference of investment in favor of the steel dock $600. Besides, we will have a dock which will last for a long time after our wooden dock has gone to the "bone yard." By all means let this matter be thoroughly investigated, and let us make no mistake in starting.
