MEETING AT THE WHITE HOUSE

Rarely Has That Historical Building Been the Scene of a More Brilliant Speciacle-President Returns Call of the Visitor.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.-Rarely in its history has the White House been the scene of a more brilliant spectacle than today, when President Roosevelt well comed to the United States Prince Hen ry of Prussia. Ever since the announce nt was made that the Prince would visit this country as the personal repre-sentative of his brother, the German Emperor, the President and members of the Administration have taken a lively interest in the arrangements for his recention. The matter has been the subject of frequent discussions at Cabinet meetings, and the details of the plans for the entertainment and comfort of the royal visitor have constantly been referred to the President for suggestion or approval. It has been the President's wish that, avoiding all ostentation, the Prince be given a cordial welcome. So far as Federal authority controls in the matter, that plan has been carried out. The Prince has met the President, and the welcome he received was genuinely hear-ty and open-hearted and he, in turn, showed unmistakable evidence of the pleasure it gave him to meet the President of the American people. Nothing could have been more cordial and ingenuous than the President's greeting to the German Prince, and it was returned in kind and in full measure.

Fine Decorations Everywhere, Special preparations were made at the White House for this event. All of the state departments on the first floor had received much attention from the Government florists, but the decorations of the three communicating pariors, the Blue room, where the President and Prince met and exchanged their greetings, and the Red parlor, occupied by Mrs. and Miss Roosevelt, and the Green room, where there were assembled the members of the Cabinet and their ladies, the wife of Secretary Cortelyou and a few invited guests, were exquisitely beautiful. The great East room, where were conducted the Prince's suite, the German Ambassador and staff, the American officers and other prominent guests, was handsome-ly decorated. In these state apartments, as elsewhere, unseemly display had been carefully avoided, but the rich furniture and draperies, the artistically arranged vases filled with great clusters of freshly-cut and fragrant American Beauty roses and other blossoms, the evergreen draperles and the gorgeous uniforms of the Prince and his party, com-bined to make the scene one of exceptional brilliancy.
The Prince appeared in the rich uniform of the Admiral of the Imperial German Navy, dark blue in color, with white finishings and rich gold embroidery. His left breast was covered with orders. The uniforms worn by his suite likewise were brilliant. The German Ambassador wore a dipiomatic uniform, dark blue, with gold embroidery. Count Quadt wore the uniform of a Knight of St. George and swallow-tail coat with white collar and cuffs and white trousers, and others of the Embassy were resplendent in gay colorings and trappings. The President of the United States were a plain black frock coat, a black tie and the turned-down collar which is habitual with him. General Corbin, Admiral Evans and the other officers of the American Army and Navy were the uniform appropriate to

Arrival of Prince Henry. It was 10:45 o'clock when the escorting cavalry column swung through the east gate, and at a brisk pace passed up the broad driveway to the White House. Here, at the word of command, the colbroke into single rank, facing the main entrance. Another command, as the Prince's carriage passed the gate and every saber flashed from its scabbard and came to the position of present. A detachment of marines, headed by its famous band, had taken place at the right and left of the main entrance facing north. The first carriage, containing the Prince, Secretary Hay and Rear-Admiral Evans, drove up at a rapid pace, and as it passed under the porte cochere, the Marine Band struck up the German National air, which was continued until all the company had left their carriages.

At the carriage door, the Prince was met by Assistant Secretary Pearce and the German Ambassador, who saluted and presented to him Major McCawley, of the Marine Corps, and Captain Gilmore, of the Artillery, in dress uniform who saluted, and then led the way into the mansion between two lines of marines with arms at salute. Walking on the left of the Prince was Secretary Hay and following came Admiral Evans, the German Ambassador, General Corbin, and the members of the Prince's suite. The party was conducted through the main lobby into the Red parlor, thence into the East room, and from there the Prince alone was conducted through the room to the Blue parlor, where the President was in waiting to receive him.

Meets President in Private. In conformity with diplomatic etiquette, the President received the royal visitor in private and without introduction. This was made necessary by the fact that there is now in the United States no representative of the German Nation of sufficiently high rank to present to the President a Prince of the royal blood, a brother and personal representative of the German Emperor. After the greet-ings had been extended, the President led the Prince into the Red parlor and in troduced him to Mrs. Roosevelt and his Gaughter, Miss Alice. After a few words with them, the royal visitor was conducted into the Green room, and introduced to the members of the Cabinet and their

After the ceremony, the following statement was made by Mr. Pearce: The conversation between the President and the Prince was of a formal nature, and had no political significance further than that contained in the expressions of amity and good will."

The party then proceeded to the East room, where the members of the Prince's suite were introduced to the President. The entire ceremony occupied 30 minutes. On the party reappearing, the Marine Band played "Hands Across the Sea," and with a few sharp military commands the drive to the German embassy was

EN ROUTE TO THE CAPITAL.

A Short Stop at Baltimore-Mayor Presents Resolutions of Welcome. BALTIMORE, Feb. 24.-The train which here Prince Henry of Prussia to the National Capital made an exceedingly slow run from Jersey City to Baltimore, there was no desire to make time it. The Prince retired shortly after the special began its jour-ney across the State of New Jersey, and it was after 7 o'clock when he arose. He breakfasted at 8 o'clock in his private car Columbia. He said he found himself very well, and thanked the President's very well, and thanked the Fresident's delegates and the ratiway officials for the arrangements made for his transporta-tion. He expressed a desire to ride on an engine at some time during the journey through the country, and it was ar- | ple massed along the curb.

The Prince's stay in Baltimore was necessarily very brief. The train arrived was met at the Union by the Mayor and an escort of 24 promi-nent citizens. Two hundred members of the various German singing societies were also admitted to the station, but none of the big crowd which congregated in the streets was allowed to approach the special train. Prince Henry came out of his apartment in the rear of the long of his apartment in the rear of the long train, and Mayor Hayes was presented to him as he stood upon the rear platform by Mr. von Lingen, the former Consul at this point. The Mayor made a warm speech of welcome and presented an engrossed copy of the resolutions of welcome which have been adopted by the City Council. The Prince in acceptant it hanked him and Prince in accepting it thanked him and the people for their courtesy. The chorus of singers then rendered several German patriotic and national airs, and after a stay of 20 minutes the train pulled out, amid the cheers of the crowds which lined the bridges over the tracks.

FROM BALTIMORE ON Secretary Hay First to Extend Formal Greetings at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24,-The trip from ore to Washington was without at. In the outlying districts of Baltimore, crowds gathered to greet and cheer the Prince as he passed. No stops were made until this city was reached. The train was closely guarded by the secret service men, with a care that will be exercised throughout its journey during the Prince's stay on American soil. The Prince occupied the time during the run from Baltimore to Washington in democratic fashion, talking freely with those about him as they discussed the country and the details of his visit. He toid the President's delegates he wished to see as clearly as possible the places through which he was to travel, and as there would be some interest of the pub-lic in seeing him as well, he thought it would be best to use open carriages in the driving portion of the itinerary ev-erywhere. The delegates told him they would arrange the matter. Secretary of State John Hay, Secre-tary of the Navy Long, Assistant Secretary of State Pearce, who had immediate charge of the arrangements at the depot, and Count Quadt, and two other attaches from the German Embassy awaited the arrival of the train at the depot. They remained in an improvised reception-room, the walls of which were heavily draped with intertwining American and German flags. The atmosphere was redolent with the fragrance of flowers. The embassy officials were in full uni-form. A bugle call by a naval artilleryunced the arrival of the train It was halted just outside the depot, the engine detached, and the cars backed to a position opposite the receiving-room, midway down the train shed. The welcoming party passed quickly into the Prince's car and informally extended to him the welcome of the city. The official greetings of the Prince, while formal, were characterized by simplicity. Secretary Hay, as the head of the Cabinct, was the first to extend greetings. He said to the Prince: "The President requests me, sir, to give you, in his name, a cordial welcome to Washington." The Prince bowed a response. Secretary Long also addressed the visitor in nearly the same terms as Secretary Hay, expressing his pleasure at the meet! Prince's response was a brief

A few moments later the party emerged and passed to the reception-room. Commander Cowles, President Roosevelt's brother-in-law, and Adjutant-General Corbin were the first to alight, and the Prince was not far behind them. Walking rapidly and with the erect bearing of a trained naval officer, past the group of officials, detectives and newspaper men, through a double line of whom he passed, saluting with a touch of his hand to the gilttering chapeau he wore, he crossed the carpeted depot aisie and entered the reception-room. Special precautions had been taken to insure the safety of the Prince and his cortege and to keep the people from pressing closely upon the party at any stage of its journey through the pubplaces in the city. At the White House a large detall of police assisted the regular me in keeping the grounds free from intrusion of unauthorized persons.

When the line of carriages bearing the Prince and cortege started from the depot, a platoon of 16 mounted policemen wheeled into tine and took position at the head of the column, Acting Lieutenant Matthews in command of them. They constituted the front platoon and a similar squad of mounted police under Sergeant Harry protected the rear. Between the policeman and carriages marched the military secort, composed of troops F and G, of the Second United States Cavalry, from Fort Meyer, headed by the band and Fourth Battery of Field Artillery, all un-der the command of Lieutenant-Commander Dimmick. They were immediately in front and back of the line of open car-riages, flanking the Prince's carriage. On each side were two mounted policemen fully mounted with equipment of gaunt lets and dress saddle cloths. They were within range of the carriage so as to avoid as much as possible any annoyance or em barrassment to the royal guest. A score side the carriages on each side at inter

From shortly before the scheduled hour of arrival all street-car service along and across the line of march had been suspended; ali vehicles, except those belonging to the arriving party, had been barred, and only authorized persons were allowed within the lines. There were only a few of these. Banked along each side of the route, in addition to the police, were over 1000 mer of the District of Columbia military. They formed a double line of sentinels at intervais of four paces, facing, of course, in-wards. Meets Many of Them, and Is Tendered a Warm Reception in Both Houses.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—The visit of Prince Henry and his suite to the Capitol this afternoon must have been not only a gratifying experience to the royal visito on account of the warm and flattering re-ception he received at both the House and the Senate, and of the opportunity it afforded of meeting personally the leaders of both houses, but it must have been an extremely interesting experience as well, The Prince not only saw the houses of the American Parliament at work, but in the Senate he witnessed one of those rare and intensely dramatic moments, which come in that body occasionally at the conclusion of a great debate.

The Prince and his party arrived at the eastern entrance of the Capitol at 4 o'clock, exactly on schedule time. Prince Henry was attired in the simple blue fatigue uniform of the German Admiral, and wore the flat German naval cap of his rank. The members of his suite work fatigue uniforms, and the German Am-bassador had exchanged his court dress for a conventional frock suit. In the matter of gold lace and braid, General Corbin and Admiral Evans, still in the splendor of full-dress uniform, outshone the Prin and his staff

After brief cordial greetings had been exchanged the Prince and his party, under the protection of a half-hundred police were conveyed through solid walls of people packed in the rotunda and Statuary Hall to the room of Speaker Henderson. Here the Speaker greeted the Prince with a warm hand-shake, as Mr. Hitt presented "His Royal Highness." General Henderson invited the Prince to be scated, while the German Ambassador made the other introductions, and then in a few words formally welcomed him,

"Your Royal Highness," said Speaker Henderson, turning to the Prince, who instantly arose, "It gives me very sincere pleasure, in behalf of the United States House of Representatives, to greet you with a cordial and heartfelt welcome, and it gives me all the greater pleasure, as you come representing in an eminent degree that friendly feeling which exist between your nation and ours, and repre senting also the cordial feeling of the 11ustrious head of the German Empire When you are ready to go from here, we have made suitable provision for your ac-commodation in the gallery, so that you can see the House of Representatives in session. When you have remained there a length of time agreeable to you, a committee, consisting of Mr. Hitt, chairman of the committee on foreign affairs; Mr Dinamore, also of that committee, and General Grosvenor, chairman of the committee on arrangements, will consult your pleasure as to what further may be gratifying to you while at this end of the Cap-

His appearance at the door of the gallery caus enthusiastic demonstration. The Prince paused, smiled and acknowledged the greetings with a slight bow. Then, advancing with the German Ambassador and Mr. Hitt on either side, he descended to the place reserved for him in the front row of the gailery. Instantly every eye was upon him. He seemed perfectly oblivious of the fact that he was on exhibition at close range. The demonstration as the Prince left the gallery was even more enthusiastic than when he en-tered. A number of members rose to their feet and cheered. The House at once adjourned to afford the members an op-portunity to meet the royal visitor per sonally. The reception was very informal. The members formed a line and were presented by Mr. Hitt. Practically the entire membership of the House took advanwho gave each member in turn a smile and a word of friendly cordiality and a firm grasp of the hand. Senate Committee Appears

Just as the reception, which lasted scarcely more than 10 minutes, was concluded, the Senate committee, consisting of Senators Cullom, Lodge and Morgan, appeared, and, after being presented, escorted the Prince and his party to the Senate. In crossing to the other end of the Capitol the party again moved through a solid mass of people congregated in the rotunda, and there was much handclapping as he passed. The Prince was interested in everything, remarked upon the polished marble columns in Statuary Hall, the great historic paintings in the rotunda and the frescoes in the corridors. Through the marble-room in the rear of the Senate he was escorted to the richly gilded chamber of the Vice-President, and glided chamber of the Vice-President, and there Senator Frye, of Maine, the president pro tem of the Senate, greeted him and the members of his suite. President Returns Prince's Call.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24 .- Prince Henry arrived at the German embassy shortly after II o'clock, the approach of the party being announced by the shrill notes of cavalry bugles. As the party came into sight, the Engineers' Band broke into "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." Over the embassy floated a flag which has never been seen in Washington before—the per sonal flag of the imperial family of Ger many. It showed not only the colors of the German Nation, but also, in the cen-ter, the imperial coat of arms. Along the front of the embassy entrance were looped the German colors, intertwined with garlands of laurels and tall green pine tops. Above floated the Stars and Stripes. Just before the embassy door stood a guard of honor of 10 United States engineers, six-footers, every one of them, in bright uniforms, as rigid as statues. Prince Henry returned the salute of the officer and then passed inside Once within the embassy, his Imperial Highness was indeed at home, for, in diplomatic parlance, this was the same as the native soil of the Fatherland. The first brief salutations now gave way to a generous German welcome. The Prin was escorted up the main stairway the spacious reception-room used as a allroom. At every hand, the German clors gave a friendly welcome to the apperial guest. The entire first floor of imperial guest. the embassy had been placed at the disposal of the Prince and his persona staff, and soon the drawing-room, the Japanese room, the smoking-room and the Ambassador's study had their guests and officials. Prince Henry had, as his private study, the Japanese room, with even the walls showing the characteristic storks. The Ambassador's office also was at his disposal when occasion re-quired. The main body of the Prince's suite, after the call at the White House proceeded to the New Willard Hotel where quarters covering the entire first were at their disposal.

As the President stepped from the carriage, the German Ambassador was at the thresh-old to greet him. There was a momentary exchange of greetings, and then the President passed up the stairway to the drawing-room, where Prince Henry was awaiting his coming. The Prince stepped forward and greeted the President most cordially and there was an interchange of amenities. The President and Prince remained together for about 10 minutes, being left alone at first, and later being joined by the Ambassador, when their personal greetings were completed. There was no exchange of formalities during the visit, which was strictly one of offi-cial etiquette, although it gave opportunity for expressions of mutual cordiality and good will between the two nations.

came that of the Commission of the District of Columbia, who called to extend to the Prince the welcome of the city. The Prince received the delegation in the drawing-room where President H. B. There is an "honest tired feeling," caused by necessary toil and cured by natural rest.

But very different is "that tired feeling," from which so many complain and which may even be classed as a disease.

This has been the experience of thousands. It will be yours if you take
