NEW ERA IN WOOL

Sellwood Mill Is Opened With Ceremony.

SPEECHES AND A BIG BANQUET

Project Long Urged Is Now a Reality—Fore-runner of Other Important Enterprises in This Section.

Portland's first woolen mill is at last in operation at Sellwood. The whir of its spindles and the rattle of its looms come as the result of long agitation for the inauguration of the enterprise by a number of active Portland business men. A formal celebration took place at Sellwood last night, at which a number of prominent citizens, who made addresses, setting forth the importance of the wool industry to Oregon and value and necessity of the development along manufacturing lines.

An industrial celebration was held last night in Firemen's Hall at Sellwood under the auspices of the Sellwood Board of Trade and the Women's Auxiliary, in honor of the formal opening of the Portland Woolen Mill plant on Johnson Creek to the inspection of the public. During the day the doors of the factory were kept open, and hundreds of visitors were shown through the various departments by Superintendent Carter. Secretary E. L. Thompson, President W. P. Olds, Charles Cooney and other officers of the company. The factory is a short distance from the Oregon City Railroad along Umattila avenue, which had been opened all the way to the plant, so that it was easy of access. All who inspected the mill plant expressed admiration for its general plan, which is strictly sanitary and modern in all lines. A full force was employed so that the machines might be seen in operation.

The ladies of the auxiliary had charge of the decorations of the hall in which the exercises were held, and in the banquet hall the women of Sellwood were present, and drew forth many expressions of admiration from the many prominent guests from Portland. It may be said here that the women of Sellwood have been very helpful and patriotic, and have greatly supplemented the work of the local Board of Trade in all its efforts to promote the growth and beauty of that flourishing suburb.

The platform was occupied by W. P. Olds, president; E. L. Thompson, secretary and treasurer; Charles Cooney, vice-president; and others who had become directly interested in the enterprise; Frank H. Gibson, Judge W. M. Calk, H. W. Scott, T. C. Devlin, M. C. Bantfield, and other prominent citizens who had come to join with the citizens of Sellwood in celebrating the happy consummation of their strenuous efforts. D. M. Donagan, president of the Sellwood Board of Trade, presided over the exercises. He welcomed the guests and friends with a few appropriate remarks. Weber's orchestra furnished the music during the entire evening, and Judge Hennessey gave vocal selections. There was a number of short addresses during the exercises, and among the principal speakers were W. P. Olds, H. W. Scott, M. Long, Major T. C. Bell and others.

What Woolen Mills Will Do.

President W. P. Olds, of the woolen mill corporation, spoke as follows:

"In responding to the toast of 'The Portland Woolen Mills—Their Present and Future,' I first wish to say that they are now in full operation and that every process, from the raw wool as it comes from the shearer's hands to the finished cloth, flannel and blanket, is now being successfully performed for the first time in Portland. It gives me much pleasure to state that the suit of clothing I wear tonight is made of Oregon wool, which was scoured, carded, spun, woven, dyed and finished into cloth at the Portland Woolen Mills and tailored in our own city. Of its value I do not care to say, but I think the day is not far distant when it will be the boast of our best men that their clothing is home-made and better made than any similar kind that comes from afar. And I also hope that the busy wish of the scourer, the soft hum of the cards, the whirr of the mangles and the rattle of the looms of the Portland Woolen Mills are but the advance guard of the industrial music that in the future will greet the visitor to Sellwood as manufacturing district. Already Dame Rumor is busy with her reports of things to come, and if the Oregon maxim that 'When it rains it pours' is to apply to this case, the owners of Sellwood property cannot be too active in erecting new dwellings in which to house the workers who will soon need accommodations.

"Woolen manufacturing is but one of the great industries that are necessary to civilization, but it is one of the first in importance, and history has no record of a civilized people who were not wool growers. When we enter a modern woolen mill let us reverently take off our hats as a mark of respect to the memory of the long line of men whose life work was to devise the processes being used in the work before us. True, the machines are nothing but metal and wood, but the educating of their inorganic bodies to perform their daily work represents the accumulated skill of mankind from the earliest date of which we have a record to the present time, as the contribution to the general health and comfort of the civilized race of the earth by these machines is just as ultimate.

"Now, for the future of the Portland Woolen Mills, I think I but reflect the sentiments of every stockholder in this enterprise when I say it is their determination to make it a model plant. In the construction much care was taken to devise the best lighting, heating and ventilating arrangements. The comfort of the employees and the sanitary conditions will always be first in the architect's mind. The attractiveness of the surroundings will receive prompt attention as soon as the more pressing needs are provided. The directors believe that cheerful and happy-looking surroundings will be reflected by more and better work being done by more willing and more loyal employees. There are a number of allied industries that will soon follow in the wake of the woolen mills to Sellwood, and every one will be of a kind that self-respecting, intelligent people may be employed in to their own advantage and to the solid upbuilding of the community in which they live. This present mill plant is but the nucleus of what it should grow to be in a few short years, and it is the earnest hope of the promoters of this enterprise that the present cordial relations existing between the citizens of Sellwood and the mill company will ever remain, as we came among you to do you good."

Mayor Howe was to have spoken, but was detained by illness.

To Encourage Manufacturing.

H. W. Scott made a few remarks on "How to Encourage Manufacturing in Oregon." Among other things, Mr. Scott said:

"The fact is the question is a difficult one. It can be solved but slowly, and only by experimental and tentative effort. Conditions are to be considered, and there are many of them. Our work must be founded upon a carefully calculated estimate of our materials, our labor and our markets. All these elements enter into the problem.

"Highly organized industry in so new a country as ours must wait upon growth. High-class or highly finished goods are as yet beyond our development. Preparation of materials for the final process is in many cases advanced manufacture.

"Our materials are wool, timber, ores, hides, flax and other fibers; fruits, which may be sold to the natural state or be made to yield various products; cereals and other products of agriculture, which yield flour and starch; meats and fish, which may be cured in great variety of ways; dairy and other products innumerable. But by manufactures we usually mean goods produced from fibers; from ores and metals; from wood and leather.

Cannot Explain the Disastrous Defeat Near San Antonio.

WILLEMSTAD, Island of Curacao, May 2.—The Venezuelan Government is unable to explain the disastrous defeat of its forces near San Antonio, April 23, when General Castillo was mortally wounded. The officials seem astonished. A force of 1300 government troops, commanded by General Vincent Gomez, the Vice-President of the republic, and the new Commander-in-Chief of the Venezuelan forces, left Coro today to join forces with General Velutini, the Minister of the Interior, and General Velutini at Barcelona and enter upon a new campaign against the revolutionists with about 300 men. CLARENCE IDE IN WASHINGTON.

Will Endeavor to Have His Nomination as Collector Confirmed.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Clarence W. Ide, ex-Marshall of Washington, and nominated to be Collector of Customs, arrived in Washington tonight for the purpose of making a fight for his confirmation. The man who had him appointed United States Marshal, John L. Wilson, accompanies him, and it is expected that there will be a lively contest from now on until the matter is settled. It is also well understood that a number of other Washington State men who are interested in the case will arrive later, some of whom are fighting Ide and others who are favoring him. While these Washington State men have been on the road for five days, every effort has been made to keep their visit as quiet as possible, though no particular object could be accomplished by so doing. Ide's presence here may interfere with the investigation which Special Agent West is to make, and if so, action upon his nomination will be delayed to that extent. Ide expects to call on President Roosevelt tomorrow, and may leave for home immediately.
