

CROWD UGLY TO OFFICER

SO HE HAS TO LET GO OF A MAN UNDER ARREST.

Later the Policeman Meets a Stranger and Hauls Him to Jail—Queer Tale of a Tenderloin Brawl.

The aftermath of an attempt to rescue a prisoner from a policeman at Second and Burnside streets, last Saturday night, came up at the Municipal Court yesterday, when W. Wyland was accused of "attempting to rescue a prisoner from an officer" on the complaint of Policeman Carpenter. It was charged that Carpenter arrested a man named Riggs in a Burnside-street saloon, and that such disturbance arose on the part of Wyland and several of his friends that the officer was compelled to let Riggs go. Monday night, Carpenter arrested Frank W. Barton, thinking that the young man was the absent Riggs, and it is charged that he severely struck Barton in the face before releasing him. He found out that he had arrested the wrong man. Barton,

THE LAST DAY TO REGISTER.

This is the last day to register. The books in the office of the County Clerk close at 5 P. M. today. If you have neglected your duty as a citizen, and have so far failed to qualify to vote on June 2, you have just one more chance; and that chance you must seize before 5 P. M. today. If you are not registered, and if you still want to vote, you must go to great trouble in order to get the necessary six freeholders to sign an affidavit. Therefore, go to the County Clerk's office today. Take a little time and trouble today in order to avoid annoyance and delays hereafter.

who is employed by the W. P. Fuller Company, says that he and his friends desire to see Carpenter punished for what he did, and threatens to bring the matter before the District Attorney's office and apply for a warrant against Carpenter.

Five witnesses were examined yesterday at the hearing in the Municipal Court, in the case against Wyland. He was defended by Lawyer Petrain. G. W. Evans testified:

"I saw Carpenter take hold of a man, and then Wyland took hold of Carpenter and abused him, and I saw a crowd that no officer could take the prisoner to jail, as he was the prisoner's cousin. This was in front of Erickson's saloon, and there was quite a scuffle. A large crowd gathered. Wyland waved his hands at the officer, but I would not say whether the officer had hold of the prisoner.

"A man whose name I don't know (Riggs) started to make a disturbance in my saloon at Third and Burnside streets, and I sent for Carpenter to eject him," stated E. W. Roberts. "Wyland was trying to get the man under arrest, and he came to my house. Carpenter took hold of the man and placed him under arrest, but the prisoner showed signs of fight."

"I was called into Roberts' saloon, Third and Burnside streets, and saw two men holding Riggs down," testified Policeman Carpenter. "Riggs called me a foul name. Wyland said that I could not take Riggs, and he made a move to ward me. I told Wyland if he struck me I would send him to the morgue. I started with the prisoner to the patrol box, and a big crowd gathered. Policeman Hill came to my assistance, and the crowd surged around me so violently that I was obliged to give the prisoner—Riggs—to some man who promised to hold him for me. But I was away. Wyland said: 'You cannot take me.' He followed me for about 150 feet, abusing me."

"Then why did you not arrest him?" asked Mr. Petrain.

"I did not want to arrest him Saturday night, because I knew I could get him almost any other night," replied Carpenter.

"But why did you not arrest him at first?"

"I did not want to agitate the crowd," "Did you have on your uniform and hat?"

"Yes, sir."

J. H. Roy, 98 North Seventh street, testified: "I saw a prisoner under arrest, and a policeman had him in charge. Wyland was endeavoring to interfere with the policeman. I tried to help the policeman, as the crowd was so dense that the policeman could not take along his prisoner. It was like a riot. Wyland waved his arms, and yelled to the crowd to come on. I haven't heard anything against Wyland, but it is right that every American citizen should protect your right, sir," interrupted Municipal Judge Cameron.

"Wyland said to Carpenter: 'You are not man enough to take me. I am just as good a man as you are, and I will fight you.' Take off your star and I will fight you." Wyland was not drunk," testified Policeman Hill.

Here Mr. Petrain gave notice that he would make a motion for a nonsuit today, Thursday, on the ground that there could be no prosecution for a case of this kind under the section under which the matter is brought, under 187, Oregon Code. The section referred to says: "If any person shall rescue or attempt to rescue any prisoner from any officer or person having the legal custody of said prisoner," etc. The penalty, upon conviction, is not less than two years or not more than 10 years in the Penitentiary, or not less than three months and not more than one year in the County Jail.

Here is the story told against Policeman Carpenter by Frank W. Barton: "I am 23 years old, and am employed by W. P. Fuller & Co. When the disturbance arose around Second and Burnside streets Saturday night, about 10:30 o'clock, I was not near the place. I was up town. Tuesday night, about 10:15 o'clock, I was passing Second and Burnside streets, and Policeman Carpenter came up and said: 'What is your name?' I told him my name was Barton. He said to come along with him, and he placed handcuffs on my wrists. He pulled them tightly, and they hurt me. At Second and Pine streets, he said: 'Where do you work?' I asked him why he wanted to know, and he then struck my upper lip, severely cutting it inside. He took me to the police station and to a room there. Afterward a man, I suppose he was a witness, came with Carpenter and looked at me, and shook his head. Then Carpenter took me into another room and told me that it had all been a mistake, as he thought I was Riggs, and he released me. He offered to shake hands and call it square.

The charges of assault and battery made by Barton against Policeman Carpenter were against Chief of Police McLaughlin, and the latter said: "I am sorry this affair occurred. Carpenter wished to arrest Riggs for that affair last Saturday night, and when he met this boy Barton he thought he had Riggs, as the two look very much alike. The officer had a right to bring in the young man as a suspect. Probably had Barton told his name, address and occupation to the policeman, who did so, there would not have been any trouble."

received information Monday night that he was around Second and Burnside streets. I went down there, and while waiting for Riggs to pass a young man whom I now know to be Barton passed. I stopped him, for his resemblance to Riggs is very close, and asked him his name. He said his name was Barton, but thinking he was really the man I was after, I asked him to come with me to the police station. As we walked along I asked him for some information concerning himself, where he worked, etc., and he would not give it. Feeling vexed at the manner in which the crowd about me last Saturday, I lost my temper, and I am sorry to say I struck him with my open hand in the mouth. He had made a break to get away, and I put the handcuffs on his wrists. Arrived at the police station I got a man who knows the real Riggs to see the young man, and this witness told me I had got the wrong party. I immediately expressed my regret to Barton for what had happened, and we shook hands, and I supposed there would be no more about it. I did not mean to injure Barton in any way."

WILL NEW EXCHANGE GO?

Front-street Brokers Refuse to Sell to New Market.

Front street has been agog in the past few days about the new produce exchange. The enterprise is backed by a stock corporation, whose capital has been raised among retail grocers, central merchants and dealers in Oregon, California and Vancouver. Officers of the corporation report that stock subscriptions now amount to over $8000.

In the past few days the company has been trying to get a location in which to do business. Its offers for a particular store raised the rent to its occupant from $25 to $50 a month, so it is said, and consequently that gentleman does not have a word to say for the enterprise. The new market will meet with a cold reception and sharp competition from established produce wholesalers, who look upon it as an invasion into their own territory, since its stockholders are retailers, bent upon taking business from old channels of trade.

Now the question is whether brokers will have any dealing with the new market. The officers of the company say the brokers have flatly refused to sell it goods, and the brokers themselves give evidence that this is so. D. F. Wagner, a prominent broker, said yesterday that he positively refused, under any circumstances, to have dealings with the exchange. His reason was that the stock company is composed of retailers who desire by subterfuge to get goods independently of the regular wholesale produce merchants.

"I refuse to sell to anybody but jobbers," he said. "I don't wish to affront the interests of jobbers by selling to retailers. The new company is made up of retailers. I flatly refuse to do business with them."

All the wholesalers that were interviewed denied that they had instigated the brokers to this action. "So far as we know the brokers will furnish them goods," said a wholesaler. "Business is business, and the man who has money gets the goods."

Encouraged by this to go further, a reporter said to a second broker: "Suppose the Produce Exchange will be able to buy from you if it has the money."

"Not so sure about that."

"The Produce Exchange people are retailers. I don't sell to retailers."

Dan Kellaher, president of the company, said that the new market would get its supplies in spite of all obstacles. He said goods always came to places where there was money to pay for them.

"There is no monopoly in the sources of supply," he added. "It is not as if a wholesaler said he would be glad to welcome the new people, 'because it will be good education for them, and they will learn a whole lot of things. All is not gold that glitters,'" he said, significantly, "even if it chances to be a gold brick." Another wondered how they were going to stay in business without broken hearts, when they had to pay $900 for a carload of bananas and half the money was lost in spoiled fruit. Still another said that the market would be surfeited with old stuff from the country which farmers could not dispose of.

The new project does not, however, seem to be discouraged by the opposition it is receiving. Meanwhile, everybody is wondering what he is going to wonder at next.

TO ELECT NEW PRESIDENT

Multnomah Club Directors to Choose Successor to F. A. Nitchy.

The Multnomah Athletic Club will have a new president. F. A. Nitchy, who now holds that position, is constrained to resign by his business interests, which call him frequently from the city. In order to insure the success of the Multnomah Carnival next September, it is necessary that the president of the club devote a great deal of time to the enterprise, but Nitchy is unable to do this on account of his business.

The directors of the club will meet tonight to elect a new President. C. F. Swartz has been mentioned for the office, but thus far has been averse to becoming a candidate. J. N. Teal has also been spoken of for the place, and so have W. M. Calk and Dan J. Moore.

The carnival will be held early next September. E. W. Rows, who will superintend the carnival, is now in the East, arranging for attractions and picking up information. The intention of the management of the club is to cover the scope of the industrial exposition held here every Autumn and to add many spectacular effects. The displays will cover Multnomah field, and Chapman street in front of the club, and perhaps several blocks of Yamhill street. If necessary the Exposition building will be included. Withal the carnival will be the most brilliant pageant ever seen in the city. Between $200 and $400 will be required to meet preliminary expenses. Subscriptions to meet this outlay will be solicited from the business men of the city.
