

TALK IN HARMONY

Gathering of Democracy at Nantasket Beach.

NEW ENGLAND LEAGUE THE HOST

Bryan Said None Desired Harmony More Than He, or Suffered More for Lack of It.

BOSTON, July 24.—Nearly 400 Democrats gathered at Nantasket today and participated in the "harmony" meeting arranged by the New England Democratic League, the new political organization which is expected to develop its strength in the fall campaign.

Colonel W. Gaston and Charles S. Hamlin, rival candidates for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in Massachusetts, were present, while Lewis Lyon, of New York, Congressman Wilson, of that state, and William F. Thayer, of Massachusetts, were conspicuous among the guests.

The gathering of the morning was cloudy and threatening, but at about 10 o'clock the sun shined and the afternoon boats to the beach were crowded. Henry F. Hollis, secretary of the league, who was the active spirit in arranging the meeting, marshaled his forces at the boat for Nantasket shortly after 11 o'clock.

At the conclusion of the dinner the crowd repaired to the large tent on the lawn in front of the hotel. In a few minutes every seat was taken, and the speaker was escorted to the Rockland House, where a meeting of the league was held.

Edward M. Shepard's Speech. Mayor Collins promptly introduced Edward M. Shepard, of New York, who spoke as follows:

"It is good for us to affirm the larger, underlying creed upon which we agree, whatever may be our differences in its application. It is good for us, it is useful to the country to affirm our agreement upon these questions of National policy which in this present year, 1902, are ripe for practical and present decision by the American people at the congressional elections. Nor do we need in doing this to deny or defend, or perhaps even regret, differences of past opinion, whether among leaders of our party or among its rank and file. The Democrats equally sincere, patriotic and intelligent have, since the American party began, differed, and differed widely, upon practical and present applications of a party creed to which all were devoted. Nor will such differences end while party life continues sound and useful."

After alluding to issues on which the Democratic party has differed and become reconciled in past years, Mr. Shepard continued:

"Now the later differences over the extent to which silver may be coined at the mint, or over the question of war with military operations in the Philippines, must not and shall not prevent a genuine and triumphant co-operation of the Democratic rank and file, practically pressing for popular determination at the polls. May we not renew the wise and righteous conciliations practiced by Democrats of other generations? The results of the Democratic party thought illustrated by our past differences is part of the glory of Democratic doctrine, and an essential condition of sound political life. The most useful American citizen is not an integral and inseparable part of any political party. His party is only his means to the political end dictated by his conscience. That is and always was Democratic doctrine."

"Two years ago the costly prosecution of our war of conquest in the Philippines made a present and practical question—the use we shall make of the American sovereignty which our military power has established in those tropical islands—the question of the tariff, even a Republican President in his concessions to be an open one. If upon the question which is now practically open before the American people, which is really the question of the tariff, a Republican President, and in large part by the Republican party, the Democratic party should resort to a timid silence, it would, I believe, invite contempt from every citizen who for what they deem to be a greater prospect of success, would have the party stifle its deep and long-time convictions."

"We cannot, however, in my opinion, truthfully say in the manner in which we shall discharge our duty on the borders of Asia is today our dominant issue. The attention of the American people is in truth fixed upon a domestic and economic question—that is, whether or not there shall be continued to a number of great and enormously rich interests the special privilege of grant and write, these parties would become apparent. With the aristocratic party he classed those who fear and distrust the people, and who draw all their power from them into the hands of the higher classes. With the democratic party he classed those who identify themselves with the people, have confidence in them, cherish and defend them as the most honest and safe, though not the most wise, depository of the public interests."

"Every well-informed student of history will recognize this distinction. In every community you can draw a line separating the aristocrat from the democrat. It will not be a perpendicular line, nor will it be a horizontal one; it will not separate those illustrious horses from those humble pigs, it will separate those who are rich from those who are poor; it will not separate the educated from the uneducated. It will not be along the lines of location of the people, it will separate those who, with the latest spirit, assume and traditions of the aristocracy from those who believe in a government controlled by the people and favor political and legal equality."

"There can always be harmony among Democrats who have the purpose that Jefferson had and are willing to employ the methods that Jefferson employed. There can always be harmony among Democrats who believe in a government for the people and are willing that all the departments of the Government shall be operated by the people and for the benefit of the people, and who, like one of old, have always been with renewed strength and courage from regular biennial contact with the earth."

"Let it be said in all truth and soberness," he continued, "that New England Republicans had at least an honorable origin. Its early history was inspired by lofty ideals and crowned with noble achievements, and while we are here today in the name and on behalf of the Democracy, we appeal to you by those great principles which were nearest to the heart of Abraham Lincoln and of all the founders of the Republican party. After the death of Lincoln, the torch upon the alleged departure of the Republican party of today from the landmarks set by its founder, Senator Carmack asserted that the concentration of wealth and power in the hands of a few men threatened the succession of the republic by a despotism of force and corruption, operating for a time within the hollow form of a republic until at last even the form shall perish with the reality of freedom."

Adverting to what he termed President Roosevelt's "crusade against monopoly and plutocracy," Senator Carmack predicted that "when that distinguished statesman comes to understand as he doubtless will that the Republican party has enthroned the trusts and made plutocracy supreme in the United States, he will prove a powerful and effective ally of the democratic party."

"The President," continued Senator Carmack, "is now engaged in a terrific lugal assault upon the trusts. He demands that there shall be more and more of the concentration of wealth. I have always understood it to be the duty of the President to advise Congress by message of such legislation as he thinks will strengthen the forces of the party. He waits until Congress has adjourned and then tells the people of the laws he intends to have enacted by some other Congress at some other time."

"The speaker censured the military administration in the Philippines for cruelties inflicted upon non-combatants and for the employment of Macabebes. In conclusion, Senator Carmack said: 'Let me warn you who sneer at the doctrines and sentiments we have been saying to you this morning. In some hour of mad passion, when you will appeal to the stirrer of the storm in the name of the old principles of the ancients, and his will answer you out of the whirlwind and with your own sneer. He will say you have taught him to despise all the faiths and traditions of the past and to trust only in the opinions and sentiments and the passions of the hour.'

"Once unchain the spirit of revolution, do not suppose that you can circumscribe or direct its work of destruction. Do not suppose that it will spare for your sake some nook or corner of the constitution, where you may find shelter and protection. Say that to yourselves, when the overwhelming force of the sea through it will not come high unto us."

"If we would perpetuate this republic we must perpetuate those high purposes that give it life and are the very breath of its nostrils. If we would resist the forces of disorder we must preserve intact and unbroken the walls which our fathers have built and stand by the laws of the constitution as by the ark of the covenant of the living God."

Bryan's Speech. The presentation of Mr. Bryan caused great enthusiasm. Cheers greeted him as he stepped to the front of the platform, and he was several times interrupted by demonstrations of approval.

"I always come to New England with pleasure, because I recognize, as Senator Carmack has said he does, how much fidelity it requires to plead for Democracy in New England. Here in New England, may we be Democrats with great credit. I have come here several times, and I confess that my missionary work has not been crowned with the success that I deserved. But we have to go on preaching righteousness, assured of the fact that evil will at last overtake those who refuse to listen or follow the truth."

"It is my privilege to come here to join with you in the beginning of the campaign of 1902. I am glad to see a representative of the State of New York, a representative of the Democracy of that state. When he tells you what he believes to be the dangers of the country, I am glad, as I am sure you are, to listen to the man who gives honest and practical advice."

"The later differences over the extent to which silver may be coined at the mint, or over the question of war with military operations in the Philippines, must not and shall not prevent a genuine and triumphant co-operation of the Democratic rank and file, practically pressing for popular determination at the polls. May we not renew the wise and righteous conciliations practiced by Democrats of other generations? There can always be harmony among Democrats who believe in a government for the people and are willing that all the departments of the Government shall be operated by the people and for the benefit of the people, and who, like one of old, have always been with renewed strength and courage from regular biennial contact with the earth."

"Let it be said in all truth and soberness," he continued, "that New England Republicans had at least an honorable origin. Its early history was inspired by lofty ideals and crowned with noble achievements, and while we are here to-

means of today are Democrats at heart. They believe with Lincoln, in 'government of the people, by the people and for the people.' I believe the only trouble is that they have not noticed the condition that has taken place in the purpose and character and methods of the Republican organization. The way to make additions to our party is to show people what the Republican party stands for today. The way to make our party strong is to expose the hypocrisy of the Republican party. There can be only one aristocratic party in the country. There will be room enough for the aristocrat at that when the people know what the party stands for."

"The Republican party of today is aristocratic in its policies and tendencies, for it is controlled by a few in the interest of a few, but there are many Republicans who remain with their party only because they do not understand the change which has taken place in that party within the last few years. There can be no doubt of the democratic instincts of a large majority of the members of the Republican party, but that party today is so controlled by organized wealth that the rank and file of the party are not consulted about the policies nor the interests of the rank and file considered by the leaders. With the exception of the tariff question, the Republican party has not in recent years honestly submitted a single important issue to the arbitrament of the ballot; or even to the judgment of the members of its own party. It has written ambiguous doctrines which every man has so right, but the dollar has every right. Point out the dangers these policies bring. 'Each man decides issues for himself. In 1900 we declared the question of imperialism paramount, and I believe, it was the most important of the hour. Yet men voted the Republican ticket rather than see the money system party attacked by the success of a man who believed it to be bad. 'They say the tariff question is important. I agree with them in this, but I do not believe you can settle it by putting everything on the free list that the trusts make. You prevent extortion by this, but it will not kill the trusts. I believe the United States has the right to say through Congress that a corporation engaged in any state can stay in that state, but that is not going outside without showing that it is doing lawful business, and not acting as a highwayman. 'I believe our party must go out and show the people what is wrong in the tariff question. Then we must also insist that while the war in the Philippines has placed us in possession of the islands, the protector continues to rule while it continues without the consent of the governed. We should do in the Philippines as we have at last done in Cuba. There is a great opportunity for the Democratic party to do Democratic work for a Democratic purpose. I am glad the New England Democratic League has commenced the work. 'The Democratic party must have a con-

JOE GANS, WHO KNOCKED OUT RUFUS TURNER.

OAKLAND, Cal., July 24.—Joe Gans, the lightweight champion, tonight knocked out Rufe Turner (colored), of Stockton, in the fifteenth round. Turner had no chance to win at any stage. Gans outclassed him, and ended the fight when he was disposed to end it.

To an impartial observer, it looked as if Gans could have delivered the knockout in any one of a half-dozen rounds. He put Turner down for the first time in the fourth, once in the eighth, in the thirteenth, once in the fourteenth and two or three times in the fifteenth before he finally put on the finishing touches with a left hook to the jaw. Gans never took a chance at any stage. Even when Turner was groggy and an easy mark for the clever yellow fellow, he kept away or jabbed easy ones to Rufe's face and allowed him to recuperate. Turner made no showing except in the sixth, when he answered up enough aggressiveness to force Gans to the ropes. But there was no fighting done. In fact, Gans came out of the fight without a scratch of any sort. Turner, however, took a good beating.

troubling purpose, unchanged by victory or defeat. It must stand for that purpose at all times and everywhere, unmoved by threats of disaster and unflinching by promise of temporary gain. It must have a character, for character is an essential part of a party as it is an individual. No one will trust an unstable man or one who is so without principle that his position upon any moral question cannot be guessed in advance. Neither will the people trust a party that is willing to go into its platform today anything that promises to catch a few votes or strike out of its platform tomorrow anything that will alienate a few votes. Even if it desired to do so, our party could not compete with the Republican party in the use of money in campaigns or in the deception or coercion of voters, because the Democratic funds can only be secured in return for the promise of favoritism and our people are not in a position to coerce. Our party must have principles and proclaim them; it must stand by them in the campaign, and it must stand by them in the rightness of those principles and upon its faith in the intelligence and patriotism of the people.

"We cannot tell what issues we may have in the future, but we determine to meet them in a Democratic spirit, to apply to them Democratic principles and to take the people's side always. In 1902 the Democratic party boldly asserted its demand for a tariff for revenue only. It fought the campaign and it won, but its majority was so narrow that a few mischievous Democrats, who were not subject, defeated the verdict of the people rendered at the polls. But the failure of the party to do all that it promised would not have been a disaster if it had not been for the fact that the Wilson bill, unsatisfactory as it was to tariff reformers, had to bear the sins of a Republican financial system which usually attend a victorious campaign against the protection of the party of the majority of the voters of the party."

Past Defeats.

"The defeat of 1894 was more disastrous than any the party has experienced since, and it was due to the fact that the Administration deserted the party on the money question. In 1896 the money question had forged to the front, made paramount not by the action of the majority but by the action of a few men who attempted of a minority of the party to chain the country to an appreciating dollar. Without abandoning its position on the tariff question the party met this issue and took the side of the people. In spite of the desertion of many formerly conspicuous in its councils the Democratic party polled a million more votes than it had ever polled before, and would have won but for the indefensible methods of the Republican party, whose leaders held all the positions of the party, but by the tariff issue to be paramount, mollified the wrath of most of the free-silver Republicans and won all the advocates of the gold standard by revealing to them the secret purpose of the party to adopt a European financial system. But even then we would have won but for the fact that borrowers were coerced and an unscrupulous Republican in turning a war, commenced for humanity, into a war of conquest, compelled the consideration of another question—a question so far-reaching in its consequences that our party rightfully declared it to be the paramount issue. Without abandoning its position on the tariff question the party met this issue and took the side of the people. It did not win that year was due to a conjunction of causes, any one of which would have been sufficient to have accomplished defeat. The Administration, having carried on a brief and successful war, fell heir to the enthusiasm which usually attend a victorious campaign, and an unexpected increase in the supply of new gold and an unexpected influx of European gold, due to large crops here

"I believe the work those should do who want harmony is to stand firm by what they believe and teach the people that we are right. I believe that if you want harmony you can get it by showing the people the dangers that menace them. Show them that it is Republican policy to consider the dollar more important than the man. Show them that the tariff system is building up industries that set above the law and at home high, then use the money they save in this way unlawfully to buy elections. Show them that this is but part of the

and a famine abroad. Increased prices, relieved the stress of hard times and gave to the people the benefits that always flow from a growing volume of money. While the advantages which followed a large volume of money were not realized, the contented for by bimetalists, they were appreciated by the party in power and those who were influenced by conditions, and by attempting to realize the cause gave the Republican party credit for an increasing prosperity. 'The protected manufacturers, of course, stood by the Administration, which had given them a Disley's Law. Trust promoters and trust magnates, recognizing in the Democratic party an inveterate foe and numbering among their stockholders many of the most influential Republicans, threw all their strength to the Republican party, and by their support purchased immunity from punishment. The Republicans were saved by another influence, namely, the influence of the financiers, who not yet having completed their schemes, were willing to risk trusts, imperialism or anything else rather than forsake the advantages which they expected from a gold standard and a bank currency. In spite of all these obstacles the campaign of 1900 only showed a net change of 10,000 votes in favor of the Republicans out of a total vote of over 10,000,000. 'And what is the situation today? Since the election of 1900, imperialism is more open avowed and imperialistic methods more boldly entered upon because the Administration can point to that election as an apparent endorsement, although the party leaders at that time vehemently decried imperialism. Those who expect to make a profit out of a colonial system favor it on the ground that it will pay; those who think it opened up the Philippines to proselytizing insist that it is providential, while those who are simply seeking some reason for supporting their party's policy fall back upon the doctrine that the circumstances got us into trouble and that we must stay in until circumstances get us out. Since the election of 1900 trusts have grown and flourished under the Republican Administration. The trusts have become expected almost two years have elapsed since the last Presidential election, and no legislative attempt has been made to interfere with their growth. The efforts, instead of being directed toward the enforcement of criminal statutes, are confined to the equity side of the court, and these efforts have not in the least retarded their growth. 'How can the opponents of aristocracy and plutocracy be united for a successful attack upon entrenched privilege? Not by attacking the person who is guilty; not by imitating their works; not by their methods or their philosophy; but by honest, straightforward appeal to the American people upon a platform that can be understood and which is an organization that can be trusted."

Mr. Bryan left tonight for Maine, accompanied by Senator Carmack and Charles S. Hamlin. Tomorrow night they will appear at Rockland. Early in the afternoon addresses will be made in Augusta and in the afternoon they will attend another meeting in Bangor.
