NO SENSATIONS DEVELOPED

All Protests Laid Aside—Ladies Must Pay for Grandstand Privileges on Ladies' Day in the Future.

SPOKANE, July 25.—At the semi-annual meeting of the Pacific Northwest Baseball League today, President Lucas was unanimously tendered a vote of thanks for "the able, conscientious and economical manner in which he has conducted the affairs of the league." Contrary to expectations there was no friction after the first few minutes. No protested games were allowed, and the forfeited game, Tacoma to Butte, was allowed to stand. Those present were President Lucas, Goodkind, of Helena; Whitemore and Marshall, of Portland; Harry Green, of Spokane; Louis Eschle, of Butte; Dugdale, of Seattle, and Higgins, of Tacoma.

Marshall, of Portland, moved that $4000 of the $5000 reserve fund be distributed among the different clubs. Green, of Spokane, protested. "You cannot get your money out of the league to join the California League," he declared. The motion was lost, and President Whitemore then made a formal denial of the Portland team's intentions to quit the league.

President Lucas' financial report showed 219,824 paid admissions to Sunday last. It was decided that there shall be one ladies' day in each series, excluding Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays; that in Spokane, Portland, Tacoma and Seattle ladies be admitted free to the grounds and charged 25 cents admission to the grandstand; that in Butte and Helena they be charged 25 cents admission to the grounds and grandstand.

It was decided that a player may be fined $5 for violation of the playing rules and may be removed from the game, but not for more than one day. No new player shall be played five games in succession without the manager first sending in a contract to the president.

INLAND EMPIRE LEAGUE.

All Three Runs "Homers," and Walla Walla Wins.

BAKER CITY, July 25.—(Special.)—The unexpected happened here today in the Inland Empire League game between Baker City and Walla Walla. Both teams put up a championship game, neither side was allowed to score, except on a home-run hit. Walla Walla proved to be the strongest at the bat, and as they were not credited with a single error they won a splendid victory. After the awful game of Thursday which the visitors put up their exceptionally fine work of today was the greatest kind of a surprise to the friends of home team. Two home-run hits were credited to Walla Walla and one to Baker City. The Baker City people were quite as enthusiastic over the game played by Walla Walla as the rooters from their sister town. The Baker City boys played with their usual vim, but they could not knock the ball over the fence every time, and nothing else would count. Attendance, 300. Score:

VENOM OF SERPENTS.

A Vaccine Lymph Made From the Virus of Reptiles.

Paris Modern World.

India is the paradise of snakes. The fact is that in India snakes are more dangerous to men than men are to snakes, if we are to believe the statistics, which show that 22,000 people die yearly in India from snake bites. As a rule, the natives are the victims, because they walk barefoot. The snakes of India may be divided into three categories—the aspics, the false vipers and the true vipers. The most dangerous are the karait and the cobra. The venom of the cobra is identical with the venom of the rattlesnake used by the Indians of North America to poison their arrows. This venom, however, is harmless when ingested through the stomach, provided there is no lesion of the mucous membrane.

The Hindoo physicians who use the venom of the cobra in the composition of their medicines enclose one of the reptiles with a banana in an earthen pot, which they place on the fire. The cobra becomes enraged and bites the banana. When he is dead the banana is removed and carefully dessicated, to be used as a tonic in the shape of a powder. Dr. Calmette, of the Paris Institute, who has made a special study of venomous snakes, collects the venom of the cobra on cabbage or lettuce leaves, which he gives to the reptile to bite. This venom, when fresh, is colorless or yellowish; it can be kept for a long time in hermetically corked bottles, providing they are not exposed to the sun, in which case it would lose its toxic properties. Desiccated, the venom has the appearance of yellowish gum, and it remains indefinitely virulent.

A queer thing is that the composition of the venom of the cobra is identical with the chemical composition of egg albumen. We find in albumen from 21 to 23 parts of oxygen, 7 parts of hydrogen, 15 to 17 parts of nitrogen, 51 to 54 parts of carbon, and 2 to 3 parts of sulphur. In the venom of the cobra the proportions are: Carbon, 53 parts; hydrogen, 7.05 parts; nitrogen, 19.20 parts; oxygen and sulphur, 21.83 parts.

The largest snake of India is the hamadryas, which belongs to the karait and cobra family, and is also venomous. Three varieties of snakes are no less venomous than the cobra; they are the daboia, the itchis and the sea snake, which sometimes ascends the Hoogly and reaches Calcutta.

There is no animal refractory to the venom of snakes. Dr. Calmette has discovered, however, that the snake is proof against its own venom and the venom of other snakes. Basing his researches on this fact, he has found in the virus of reptiles a serum which is not only a remedy but a positive vaccine-lymph. He experimented at first on vabayas and rabbits, later on larger animals, with the venom of snakes of various countries; the cobra, the aspic of Egypt, the viper of Europe, the viper of Gabon, the horned viper of London, the rattlesnake of America, the blacksnake and the tigersnake of Australia.

Dr. Calmette inoculated the animals and exposed them to the biting of snakes. When not treated with his serum they generally died inside of two hours. In inoculating rabbits the doctor prepares a progressive quantity of pure venom, reaching a weight of 26 milligrams, or 64 times more than is necessary to cause the death of the animal. In this way he secures a series of serums of graduated strength, the weakest of which cures a rabbit 20 minutes after being bitten, and the strongest an hour and a half, or half an hour before the time when death should naturally occur.

A Unique Village.

Pearson's Weekly.

There is in Hungary a village probably unique among the world's townships, in that it not only encourages chess as a pastime, but insists that the king of games shall be played by every man, woman and child in the place. It is just as necessary in this out-of-the-world spot for the inhabitants to be proficient chess players as it is for them to be able to read, write and cipher. Prizes are given to the school children for proficiency in chess. Problems are given to the scholars that they are expected to take home and work out in their spare hours in addition to their other tasks.

Hungary has long been famous for her chess players. Indeed, this little village has, as can be well understood, turned out more than one player who has been considered fit to rank with such giants as Lasker, Steinitz and Tschigorin. Every Christmas a great tournament is held in the village, and the burgomaster gives prizes for the best juvenile and adult players.

GLOSS WINS SINGLES

PORTLAND CREW GETS FOURTH PLACE IN JUNIOR FOUR RACE.

Gloss Makes a Beautiful Spurt and Wins His Event for Portland at the Nelson Regatta.

NELSON, B. C., July 25.—(Special.)—The weather for the first day's races of the North Pacific Association regatta was very hot, and the course like glass. The junior single was won by Henderson, of Vancouver, by default. Victoria won the junior four, with Nelson 1½ lengths behind, and Vancouver and Portland third and fourth, respectively. The start was close, but Victoria soon took the lead, rowing 25 to Nelson's 36, Portland's 34 and Vancouver's about 38, which strokes were closely maintained. The Victoria crew held its lead with a long, powerful stroke, and, although the Nelson crew rowed in superb form, it lacked the power of its rivals to make a hard finish. The Vancouver and Portland crews rowed well, but were outclassed. The time given is 7:59.

In the senior singles Gloss of Portland defeated Henderson of Vancouver by half a length, with Patton of Portland a poor third. Gloss took the lead, rowing 36, but soon settled down to 30, which both others were rowing. After the mile was reached Henderson pulled up on Gloss and away from Patton. Near the finish it was neck and neck, but Gloss made a beautiful spurt and won in 9:21.

The winning Victoria junior crew will row in the senior race tomorrow, and is thought to have a good chance of winning.

Cricket at Manchester.

LONDON, July 25.—When play ceased at Manchester yesterday, All-England's position in the test cricket match with the Australians appeared desperate. Against Australia's 299 runs for their first innings, the English had lost five of their finest batsmen for only 70 runs, and their defeat was apparently inevitable. On resumption of play today, however, matters improved. The remaining English batsmen made a fine stand, and their side scored 262 runs in their first innings before they were dismissed. At the close of play today, the Australians in their second innings scored 85 runs for eight wickets down.

FORGET HOARDS IN BANKS

Scores of Depositors in Savings Institutions Never Called for Money.

An officer in a New York savings bank that has 137,000 depositors—one of the largest in the country—and whose deposits exceed $75,000,000, has unearthed enough romances in which the bank has played a part to stock a novelist with raw material for life, says the Anaconda (Mont.) Standard. It is the duty of this clerk to look up the owners of "dormant" deposits; that is, deposits that have lain untouched in the bank for 22 years, at the end of which period they cease to draw interest. That there are enough such deposits to keep one man constantly busy trying to find out to whom the money belongs is significant as attesting the fact that many persons put away money without the knowledge of their relatives, and later on die without ever having disclosed the fact.

Among the quaint and curious romances which the bank furnishes is that of Frederick Cullman, who opened an account in 1861. In 1863 he died and his widow transferred the account to her own name as trustee for their three children. Finally the account, then amounting to $1197 63, became dormant. Years of letter-writing and advertising at last brought to the bank a prosperous-looking man, who said he was William Cullman, son of Frederick. He said that his father's sudden death had deranged his mother's mind and she was finally sent to an asylum, while the children went to an orphanage until old enough to work. He could not remember where he had lived in childhood, except that one house was opposite a graveyard. Examination of the old maps proved that Frederick Cullman had lived in such a place, and the son pointed out the exact house. Thus the unfortunate mother, still living, though insane, eventually received the benefit of her husband's savings.

Aaron L. Magoun opened an account in the '50s. When it became dormant it amounted to only $8 66. After much advertising there came to the bank a letter from a claimant, and in response to a request for a personal interview, there appeared a little old lady in the costume of half a century ago. Aaron Magoun had been her husband, and her grief over his untimely death had never ceased. She produced letters written by the dead man to her, which proved the relationship.

Ulrich Habermeier in July, 1863, wrote from the camp of the Eighteenth New York, at Brandy Station, Va., inclosing nearly $400. He was never heard of again, and search of the War Department records showed that he had died in prison at Florence, S. C., in December, 1864. Every Grand Army post in the United States was searched in vain for men who knew his relatives. Ambassador White then set the German officials to work, and finally, in March, 1901, there was found in Germany a letter written by Habermeier in March, 1863, and $431 79 was ultimately divided between a brother, sister and nephew of the soldier.

British Picture of Washington.

London Morning Post.

The career of Washington, full as it was of picturesque incident, has provided few subjects for British painters, and it is not easy to recall canvases that illustrate episodes in the life of the great founder of the American Republic. Mr. Andrew Gow, R. A., has made the first President the principal figure in the picture he has sent to the Academy, and in "General Washington's Farewell to the Army" the artist shows us the ex-commander of the forces saying good-bye to his companions in arms at Whitehall Stairs, on the Hudson River. It was a passage from "The Virginians" that inspired Mr. Gow, and in his picture we see the long line of infantry in blue and buff uniforms that formed a guard of honor from the tavern to the ferry, with a group of bareheaded officers at the top of the stairs saluting their leader for the last time before he steps into the barge which is to convey him across the river. Washington, an impressive and dignified figure, has already abandoned his uniform, and it is in a suit of sober black that he stands on the pierhead shaking hands with General Knox, who succeeded him in command of the Army.

Among the officers behind General Knox are many who took prominent parts in the Revolution, including Anthony Wayne, Nathaniel Greene and General Steuben among others. Below the pier of the weather-beaten piles there is the waiting barge, its crew saluting the General by poising their long blue painted oars, and beyond are the gray masts and yards of the shipping in the Hudson River. Mr. Gow's picture is sure to attract a great deal of critical attention from the many Americans who are coming to London this season for the coronation. It is curious that while a British artist paints Washington for the Academy, an American, Mr. Millet, illustrates for the same exhibition the proclamation of King Edward VII.

OUR LEADING ONES AND WHY

We have as our "leaders" the celebrated Chickering piano, of Boston; the beautiful Weber, of New York, and the now famous and superb Kimball, of Chicago.

There must be a good reason why we selected these pianos.

If the selection had been limited to these three instruments, there would not have been much virtue in our choice.

There would have been nothing else to do.

But we chose these three out of nearly two hundred makes manufactured in the United States.

We chose these three pianos because we consider them the highest-grade pianos it is possible to produce.

Our choice is reinforced and made of value to you when you know that back of it there was 15 years' experience in the manufacturing, wholesale and retail piano business, and an accurate knowledge of every piano on the market today.

It is made of much greater value to you when you know that we have had the choice of practically all the high-grade pianos manufactured.

The Chickering piano is made by the oldest established piano factory in the United States. It has maintained the highest possible standard for seventy-five years, a fact that entitles it to the serious consideration of every person who thinks of purchasing a piano. Whatever age and experience develops, combined with integrity and abundant capital, is embodied in the Chickering of today.

The Weber is an instrument that its makers have endeavored to make superlative from the standpoint of tone. It is the embodiment of a musician's ideal of tone, and it is rightly claimed for it that, "from the standpoint of that pure, rich, sympathetic quality of tone, combined with the most unyielding durability, it stands alone."

The Kimball pianos, while not so old as either of the above makes, has taken the highest rank. A singnificant fact in this connection is the sales of the Kimball. It is asserted by those who are in a position to know, that the Kimball is going into more homes than all other high-grade makes combined. The output of the factory exceeds 25,000 instruments yearly. The Kimball received highest honors at the World's Columbian Exposition, and more recently at the Omaha Exposition. We feel that it is not overstating the matter to say that the Kimball is as perfect an instrument as human agencies can construct.

These are some of the reasons, briefly, why we selected these three great pianos for our leaders.

We have in addition to these superb instruments about twenty-five other makes of pianos, including the reliable Decker, the beautiful Vose, the new Hobart M. Cable, and new Victor, the new Schumann, the Himze, the Crown (the piano with the many tones), the Vease, the Whitney, etc.

We believe that it is possible for us to suit every taste, desire, whim or caprice that enters into the selection of a piano, whether it be from the standpoint of quality of the instrument, price or terms,
