PLEASANT OPTIC FRIENDS

Accused of having opium unlawfully in his possession, Fred L. Jones was fined $50 yesterday by Municipal Judge Hogue. Jones was originally arrested a short time ago, charged with being implicated in the larceny of money from a Third-street fruit store, and when it was found that two witnesses could not be brought from San Francisco to prosecute, the larceny charge was dropped and a charge of vagrancy chalked against Jones. It was then decided that no evidence that Jones is a vagrant could be discovered, and he was about to be discharged when a detective suddenly remembered that when Jones was arrested an opium pill was found in one of his pockets. He was then charged with unlawfully having opium in his possession, and as he had about $15 with him when arrested, he hired a lawyer to defend him. In reaching his decision, Judge Hogue stated that he had been guided to a considerable extent by the ruling of the Supreme Court, where the decision of Judge Shattuck was upheld in the Monack case, in which Chinaman, charged with having opium unlawfully in his possession, failed to offer evidence showing that the opium had been secured for medical purposes or by order of a practicing physician. In Jones' case, the Judge argued, the prescription calling for the opium bore no evidence that it had been filled in a drug store, and thought that the drug exhibited was of a kind generally used for smoking. A notice of appeal to a higher court was given.

WHAT NOT TRANSLATE THE OCEAN?

A woman who signs herself Mrs. A. Wisheart, president of the Woman Philanthropists' Club, of Portland, but whose personality has not been definitely ascertained, writes from a beach where she is spending a vacation, to ask The Oregonian to make public a rather startling but, perhaps, not impossible idea which has occurred to her. Her idea is that all people really have to go to the beach for it is the salt water and the cool sea breezes. Fish, clams, crabs, etc., are much more plentiful in Portland and to be obtained more cheaply. Her idea is that, as Portland is supplied with pure mountain water at a large expense, salt water and the cool sea breeze might be supplied to the city through a pipe line or line, and a beach with surf bathing and cool wind be established here, where they would be accessible to all, even if they could not afford a trip to the coast. Mrs. Wisheart gives some details to show that the force of the wind could be used to push the water up here, the rise being only eight feet, and then the breeze could be forced through the pipe under the same pressure. Her idea is certainly a novel one, and worth being considered, as, if practicable, it will save a great number of people a great deal of money and trouble. She says the scheme, if undertaken, should be carried out by Exposition time, and if it is it may be as the distance is only about 100 miles.

WHERE SLEEP IS PLEASANT

A citizen who has been spending a few weeks at a mineral springs in the Coast Range, where the sun and the sea breeze are hotter, in order to cure an attack of rheumatism, arrived home Friday. He says nothing about any improvement to his health, but states that the pack of the bounds was maintained at the hotel where he stayed. They did not as a usual thing all bark around the hotel every night, as some of them were quarreled at the home ranch on the hill above. When the whole pack did turn out, they spoiled the sleep of some of the guests, but did not disturb him, as he has been living for some time in one of the best districts of Portland, where two to six dogs are kept at nearly every house in many of the streets. One night someone's unusual bark placed all the dogs on the hill above the hotel, each about 200 feet high and 500 years old, and they came sliding down toward the hotel, and all the guests fled for their lives, but no one was hurt.

LECTURE ON SWEATSHOP EVILS

A lecture, principally on the evils of the sweatshop system, will be delivered by Mrs. Frederick Nathan, president of the Consumers' League, of the City of New York, this evening at 8:15 o'clock, in the Scottish Rite Hall, under the auspices of the Consumers' League of Oregon. Mrs. Nathan will also assist in establishing a local branch of the Consumers' League. Mrs. Nathan has just returned from California, where she organized three league branches one at San Francisco and the others at San Jose and Los Angeles. There are about 45 leagues at present in this country, the parent New York League being started 11 years ago. The Consumers' League is an association of persons who strive to do their buying in such ways as to further the welfare of those who make and distribute the things bought. The present aims of the league are to extend among all mercantile establishments the commendable conditions now existing in the best and to abolish the sweating system; that is the special task of the National Consumers' League in co-operation with the local leagues. The methods taken by the leagues to promote this end are by the standard of fair house and a white list, by the use of the Consumers' League label, and by promoting the enactment and enforcement of better laws relating to the conditions of employment. Goods bearing the label of the league are made in factories where these conditions are observed, the state factory law observed, all goods are made on the premises, overtime is not worked, and children under 16 years old are not employed.

WILD BLACKBERRIES COMING IN

A little ripple joy has been started in some households by the appearance of boys with wild blackberries to sell. Every housekeeper wants "just a few" wild blackberries, for certainly there is nothing to compare with them in taste or flavor, and every housekeeper desires to store away for winter wild blackberry jelly, jam, preserves, cordial, put up in jars for pies or preserved in some other way. The boys who have gone into the business of gathering these favorite berries must be ex-members of the salt water and all the other trusts, and natural-born millionaires and monopolists, from the way in which they have started business, fixing the price of berries at 25 cents per gallon, and calling half a bushel, 2 1/2 gallons, worth $1.25. Those who care nothing about cost will buy all the wild blackberries they want, but the price will have a tendency to prevent many from laying in a too large stock for winter. Just why the trust has placed the price at 25 cents per gallon is difficult to imagine, as they might just as well have had it a dollar, and this would have made it handier reckoning. It is odd that for the best in berries, fowl and many other things it is necessary to go to the coast. The trust, it causes one to wonder whether or not the human beings may not have lost some good qualities through civilization.

FOR BETTER SIDEWALKS

The sidewalk ordinance which was introduced by Councilman Rummel at the last meeting of the Common Council will be taken up for consideration by the City Engineer Elliott yesterday afternoon. The ordinance is generally favored, and it is not likely that any protest against it will be made. The ordinance is proposed as an ordinance providing for the barricading of all defective sidewalks after notice of repairs has been given, and it will probably be introduced at the next meeting of the Common Council. The City Engineer Elliott yesterday directed the posting of danger notices on the sidewalks of the Perrott estate, on Raleigh street, between Fourth and Fifth streets, the Spalding Papworth property, at Twelfth and Gilliam; the German Savings & Loan Society, at Twelfth and Flanders; George T. Myers, at Twelfth and Davis; A. B. Manley, at Ninth and Park; and F. W. Burkhardt, Park and Gilliam. All the property-owners were ordered to make the repairs, and if they are not made within five days they will be ordered by the Board of Public Works and an entry made in the docket of city liens.

MEMORANDUM FUND NEARLY RAISED

The $200 fund for the Hawaiian Immigration Bureau is about raised. The fund is actually subscribed and more than enough has been promised to raise the fund to $200, and the committee can get the money whenever it chooses to go out for it. The committee is a joint body representing the Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce. Specifications for the fund are as follows: The fund to be used, have been prepared, and printers are making estimates of the cost of publishing. There will be some delay in issuing the fund, because of the fact that local printers have little of the stock that will be required. But the pamphlet will be ready by the time the Hawaiian Bureau begins its Fall advertising. Secretary Reed, of the Chamber of Commerce, has prepared the copy for the edition.

BETTER STREET, MAYBE

There is good prospect that citizens will see the elevated roadway on North Front street improved if they live through the Fall. The street has been in sad shape for a long time and impassable except to those persons who were willing to take their lives into their own hands. An ordinance will probably be introduced in the Council at the next session to provide for the improvement of the roadway. The City Engineer Elliott said yesterday that the roadway is 1200 feet long. It is proposed to replank the west half of the roadway. The intention is ultimately to fill in the street. The repairs will extend from Court street near the Martin mill. North Front street is probably the worst avenue in the city in winter time.

WOOD SHAKES AIZ SOLD

The market season for wood in Oregon is nearly over. The next month will see about all of the clip disposed of. Eastern buyers are already beginning to close up their business. Preparatory to going home. Comparatively little product is being sold in the interior country, not 1,000,000 pounds, according to the estimate of a local agent. About 2,500,000 pounds are in Portland awaiting shipment. About 150 bales a day are prepared for shipment. The Oregon crop this year has amounted to fully 15,000,000 pounds. Growers have been freely at prices between 12 cents and 14 cents for the great part of the clip.

MAYBE IT WAS TRICK

W. J. Clemens, whose home is on the east bank of the river, south of Inman, Poulsen & Co.'s mill, thinks his trick starts that his house is bristling with burglar alarms. Some time ago he had the forethought to equip every door and window of the house with an automatic alarm, connecting with an annunciator in the room in which he sleeps. The only opening in the house which is not guarded is the chimney, and this is left open for Santa Claus. Several nights ago Mr. Clemens was awakened by the clanging of the faithful alarm. Immediately he pressed a button and his room was lighted. A glance at the annunciator told him Mrs. Burdell was in the drawing-room. Pressure on another button put every light in the house ablaze. Meanwhile the bell kept up a din that awakened every person in the neighborhood. By this time Mr. Burdell was in full retreat, and Mr. Clemens saw only his feeble shadow. The very next night the same or another burglar made an attempt to enter the same room, but the alarm set up its racket again and scared him off. Mr. Clemens says the alarm is so far feared more by the standard of fair house and a white list, by the use of the Consumers' League label, and by promoting the enactment and enforcement of better laws relating to the conditions of employment. Goods bearing the label of the league are made in factories where these conditions are observed, the state factory law observed, all goods are made on the premises, overtime is not worked, and children under 16 years old are not employed.

NO HURRY ABOUT NOME STRAHER

The problem of getting a steamship for the Nome miners' job is J. K. Rudd represents is still unsolved. Yesterday members of the Board of Trade piloted Mr. Rudd around among business men. Every one to whom his proposition was taken with it, but he could get no positive assurance that a steamship would be forthcoming. Mr. Rudd was disposed to think last night that the city was not living up to the opportunity he offered. The established transportation lines are very jealous of their business, and are leaving no stone unturned to keep him from encroaching upon it. He has declared several times that "trailers" from Seattle were on his track, who worked to his disadvantage at every opportunity. The question is still up in the air, but the city does not take hold with the alacrity Mr. Rudd desires. He will stay over in Portland another day before returning to Eugene.

NEW SCHOOL DISTRICT

The District Boundary Board for Multnomah County, consisting of the County Judge, County Commissioners and County School Superintendent, met yesterday afternoon for the organization of a school district between the Columbia River and the Columbia Slough. The new district will be known as district No. 12, and being a vacant one of the county, it is not included in the census. The territory composing the new district is on the north side of the Vancouver and bridge, extending to the mouth of the Willamette. To accommodate the children the district will probably maintain two small schools or transport the children to the western part of a house near the bridge.

MUTCH TOO LITTLE

The row which recently took place at Montgomery dock, Albin, when Foreman E. Mutch was assisted by his partners, Henry Wolf, C. Wolf and G. Wolf, who had worked under him, came before Justice of the Peace Reed yesterday, when he passed a judgment. Mutch, by default of which the men will be required to spend 10 days in the County Jail. The brothers became deeply offended when Mutch intimated that there was no more work for them in Albin, and according to the evidence before Justice Reed, two of the brothers beat him severely, while a third brother stood by and dared any of the crowd to interfere.

The wedding was a quiet affair, the immediate members of the bride's family being present. Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham left for a trip through the Yellow Mountains, to include an extended trip through Washington, D. C., New York and Eastern Summer resorts. IN FARTHEST ALASKA

EXPERIENCE OF GEORGE W. CALDWELL ABOVE KOTZEBUE.

Miled by Bogus Guide and Suffered Privation, but Likes the Country, Just the Same.

An experience of 15 months in the frozen north has convinced George W. Caldwell that the search for minerals in Alaska is not unattended with danger. During the time he spent in the territory he barely escaped the loss of his feet, saved his nose from freezing by the timely application of snow, had two narrow escapes from death by sea and land, and lives to tell the tale. Mr. Caldwell appears to be all the better for his northern trip, for he weighs 30 pounds more than he did when he left Portland, in April last year, and says he is in better health than ever. Mr. Caldwell went north with a party composed of G. W. Williams as conductor, M. E. and F. W. Beatty, and L. A. Clark, of Portland, and D. S. Richards, of Boise City, Idaho. Williams had agreed to locate them on the Colville River, where he said there were rich diggings and where he had made frequent visits. For his trouble he received $500.

"And he was a faker," said Mr. Caldwell last night. "He had never seen the Colville River, but he had told people that he had been up there, and he induced many of them to advance him money for the making of claims. For a while we had a great deal of confidence in him. After our experience with the stormy waters of Kotzebue, when we were nearly swamped and had to drop anchor from our five-ton raft in order to keep from being dashed upon the shore, we had him take us up the Kobuck to the Noatak Mountains, which were impassable. On September 1 we decided to go into Winter quarters on the Ambler River. Williams appeared to have got discouraged, and in company with Richards, he started back for home. Mr. Caldwell and his party followed the find was not what it was reported to be, and Mr. Clark and M. E. Beatty also left us, going in a canvas canoe that I would hardly care to risk my life in. F. W. Beatty and myself remained, and we had a hard time of it during the Winter. We had taken in 14 head of horses, and we built a stable for them, but we might as well have saved our labor, for before the Winter was over all of them had frozen to death in their stalls. The animals simply could not stand the cold, and we awoke one morning to find them erect and rigid.

"Mr. Beatty and I did not know what to expect next, and to prepare for an emergency we built a boat. We cut down several trees, and with our whipsaw we cut some timbers that might be taken for the output of a mill—if a person did not look at them closely. As the timber was frozen solid, we had to dig a hole in the frozen ground and bury it and build a fire around it in order to thaw it out. To speak about the digging of that hole would lead people to believe that I was telling a Northern story, so I will only say that every blow of the pick brought sparks from the frozen sand. We thawed the lumber out, and in the Spring we were able to build the boat on which we floated down the stream. The craft was only 25 feet long, but it had a carrying capacity of three tons.

Mr. Caldwell has secured an interest in claims in a district about 100 miles from the Colville River. These claims, he says, are very promising, and if the diggings are as good as they appear to be, he will return to Alaska next year. Mr. Caldwell started out to inspect the diggings, and it was on the trail that his feet and nose were frozen.

"I knew that I was freezing to death until I returned to the cabin and moved close to the fire," he said. "Then I lost no time in taking care of myself. Alaska is a strange country. When the mercury is 50 degrees below zero you would not feel it any colder than it is in Portland at zero. In fact, you never feel the cold. You simply get numbened, and if you stop to rest, it is over. No noise will disturb the rest that may be your last sleep, for there is not a breath of air to rustle the branches of the frozen pines."
