NEW ZEALAND IS THRIVING

But Merchant Visiting Portland Says It is in Spite of Paternal Land and Labor Laws—Immigration at a Standstill.

"Wool is still the principal product of New Zealand, but there has been a slump on account of the low price," said F. J. Shelton, a merchant of Auckland and one of the first of the large number of British colonists who arrived in the city last night on a tour of the United States and Canada, and is at the Portland. "On account of the drought in Australia, we have been exporting more wool to Sydney, which has never happened before in the history of the colony. Butter is also becoming one of the principal exports, the increase in this commodity having made up for the loss in the value of wool exported. We also export a great deal of beef, mutton, and especially lambs, to England, and Sir Richard Seddon says are the butchers' best. There is a good market for wheat and flax, and everything over there in the way of produce is looking up. We are also producing a little gold. The colony each year for the last six years has shown a large surplus receipts over expenses of any of the British colonies."

How the compulsory arbitration law works.

"The principle of arbitration is good as long as you can get independent judges. Our system is to have representatives of both sides and a Judge of the Supreme Court as president of the court. The manufacturers do not like the arbitration, but to the way in which the law is worked. Seddon himself has said to the workmen that, if they rode the labor law to the wall, they would be looking out. Since then there has been a decided change in the character of the decisions of the arbitration courts. Every trade union would bring the employers before the court, and let all the workmen not give the union all it asked, it would always give it something. Arbitration has been a good thing for the manufacturers who are already there, because no more have come in. Some factories have been closed, and others have been removed to Australia. Wages have gone up, but the price of commodities has gone up also so that the workmen, with their increased wages, are not as well off as they were 12 years ago. In one case of arbitration at one of the largest gold mines in the country, the employers shut down and let all the workmen under contract, with the result that the output has increased 25 per cent."

New Land Tax System.

"How does the colony get along with the new system of land taxation?" "We have got used to the present system, and it is not so difficult to work. There is a tax based on the government valuation of land, and an additional tax on all holdings over a certain amount, graduated according to the size of the holding. Average, however, is the purchase by the government of large estates at a compulsory valuation fixed by appraisers, and for their division into small tracts which are let to workers for 99 years. New Zealand is a very good country, and is capable of carrying a large number of settlers on small tracts, which is the best system for the development of the country. The government has a new provision, and it cannot plan to divide the land among his sons as many men would wish. That law has caused more dissatisfaction than any other, because of the compulsory valuation created among landholders. It has worked out satisfactorily for some settlers to the government, where there was a chance of corruption, as the settlers only get a freehold, the result being that there is no opening for investors to loan money on land. On account of the nature of the title, interest advanced, but the government must pay the interest, and borrowing in England and lending to the settlers at current rates."

"It is not good policy to compel settlers to sell half their land. Why not encourage settlers to buy up the land instead of compelling old settlers to sell land that is already improved? The new settlers ought to be compelled to go into the country, and let all the workmen for land, as others have done before them."

"Other measures adopted by the government are generally admitted to be useful if fairly administered. We have an old-age pension law for people aged 60 who have been in the colony a certain number of years, and have not accumulated enough for a living. It is a very useful measure, but it will times should come, it would cost more than the colony can stand. It was estimated to cost not over $20,000 a year, but it already costs over $200,000 a year."

Seddon Has a Sure Thing.

"We have an election at the end of this month, and Sir Richard Seddon, who has already been Premier through three, if not four, Parliaments, will have a walk-over with no opposition whatsoever. The only hope the opposition has is that Seddon's majority will be so big that it will break up of itself. The opposition in the last Parliament was so weak that it was no organized opposition, so the individual members confined themselves to criticism of the government measures. Seddon's party is made up mainly of the workmen, the farmers, the landowners and manufacturers, who are opposed to him on account of the factory laws. While Seddon is given credit for the prosperity of the country, it is not due to him, but to the farmers, who are his opponents, who have kept at work improving the land. "What New Zealand wants now is an arrest of legislation, so that it may digest the laws it has. The government should give freehold titles, and give security to the landowners, while the opposition consists of the farmers, landowners and manufacturers, who are opposed to him on account of the factory laws. While Seddon is given credit for the prosperity of the country, it is not due to him, but to the farmers, who are his opponents, who have kept at work improving the land."

Surprised at Oregon.

"I was very greatly surprised to see the country I traveled through in Oregon. I did not expect to see it as well settled, or as good a country, so far as I could judge from the train. I was in San Francisco six years ago, and notice a great change for the better in the style of buildings. The streets are clean and well kept, and the people look prosperous. Six years ago they were a seedy-looking crowd. Mr. Shelton is traveling in company with A. McCosh Clark, a warehouseman of Auckland, who has formed a decided opinion as to the cause of the difficulty England had in 1840. He was formerly a volunteer soldier in England, and compares the old country with

A Voice From Washington County Against the Centennial.

HARRISON, Or., Nov. 2.—(To the Editor.)—I see your issue of October 25, and the Hon. H. W. Corbett says that unless the state Legislature will appropriate $500,000 to the Lewis and Clark Fair, there will be no fair. If that be the case, I think better there should be no fair; we are burdened with taxes as it is, and an appropriation of that amount means an additional tax of 14 mills. Now instead of a benefit to the state at large it would be a detriment. There has been a number of intended settlers scared out of the state as it is by our excessive taxes. Now, add 14 mills more and few will come to invest as taxpayers of the state. The $500,000 is only a beginning. Let the Legislature appropriate that sum, then comes an appropriation for the St. Louis Fair in 1904, then another appropriation for the fair in Japan. As for all the benefit to be derived from these fairs to the state at large, I do not believe that it will pay for the investment.
