the Passionists. As the order is an Eng-lish one, it was recognized that representations concerning its rights must come solely from the British officials. Ambassador Porter's representation was mainly verbal and pointed out the con-venience of the church to Americans, and the Ambassador expressed a hope that this convenience would not be interrupted. It is stated from an authoritative source that Ambassador Porter's representation was in no sense a protest. assertion of international right, as it is fully recognized that the governments' action towards the congregations is a question of domestic policy, and the matter will not be referred to Washington, as in the case when international rights is involved. On the contrary, these representations of a conciliatory nature have developed a personal desire on the part of the gov-ernment officials to yield in the matter, but it is felt that it is difficult for the government to act at the present stage inasmuch as the entire question of the congregations has been submitted to the Chamber of Deputies. It is also pointed out by the French officials that an exception in this case would give foreign religious orders privileges which are not allowed to the French orders. It is believed that the final determination of the question rests with the Chamber.

1873, in which he denies that royal sanction never was given to the concession alleged to have been made to Trinidad by the Governor of Patos; Huevos and Monos. Great Britain, through her Charge d'Affaires at Caracas, and later through her Minister, advanced the contention that when she conquered the Isl-and of Trinidad in 1797 sovereignty over Patos also was obtained, and so recognized by the Madrid government; that Patos has remained in the peaceful possession of Great Britain for more than a century, during 70 years of which time Venezuela advanced no counter claim, and that the official map of Codazzi colors the Island of Patos the same as Trinidad, indicating that both belong to the same

To this last contention Venezuela replied by stating that the map of Codazzi was so old as to make it impossible to distinguish the various colors, and produced other maps by the same author, which place Patos as belonging to Venezuela. Being unable to agree on even the m points of the controversy, the British Minister, near the close of last year, informed the Venezleian Foreign Office that he would make no further representations in the matter, as there was nothing to be gained in continuing the correspondence. It is understood that President Castro was ask that the question be settled by arbitration, a proposition to which the British government will hardly accede, in view of its contention that the ownership of Patos is so clearly British as not to furnish a suitable subject for arbitration. SICK MARINES BROUGHT HOME.

Keen Could Not Have H shipman Aiken, Footballist.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 7.-Dr. William W. Keen, the eminent surgeon of this city who was recently summoned to Ancity who was recently summoned to An-napolis to perform an operation on Mid-shipman Alken, to relieve him of the ef-fects of injuries sustained in a football game, attributes the success of his oper-ation to knowledge gained through ex-periments in vivisection. Dr. Keen has addressed a letter setting forth the facts in the case to Senator Gallinger, whom he regards as one of the leaders of the anti-vivisectionists in this country. Dr.

anti-vivisectionists in this country. Let Keen, in his letter, says: "I deem it my duty to call your at-tention to the case of Midshipman Alken, of the United States Naval Academy, who was recently injured in a football rame. My reason for doing so is to show you by a single concrete example that knowledge gained by animal experimentaknowledge gained by annual experiments, iton is an immense boon to humanity, and that, therefore, such experiments should be heartily encouraged. The facts of Mr. Aiken's case are as follows: "When I first saw him, three days after the accident. I found that he had been the accident. I found that he had been unconscious for a half-hour after the ac-cident, and ever since then had com-plained bitterly of headache, which he located always in the forehead. Soon after the accident he began to develop convulsions. In six hours and a half after I saw him he had 24 of these at-tacks, all limited to the right arm. There was no fracture of the skull. The only physical evidence of any injury was a physical evidence of any injury was a very slight bruise at the outer end of the left evebrow.

"Had I seen this case before 1885, I would have been unable to explain why the spasms were chiefly manifested in the right arm. I would have been justified in inferring that probably the front part of his brain was injured at the point of the bruise. Had I opened his skull at that point, I would have found a per-fectly normal brain, and have missed the clot. The young man, therefore, would have died, whether his skull had been opened or not. "In 1902, observe the difference. As a result of knowledge derived from experi-ments upon animals, which have located precisely the center for motion of the right arm. I reached the conclusion that there had been a rupture of a blood vesse within the head, and that the situatio the clot should correspond to the center.' Its position was fixed absolutely s a result of experiments upon animals "As soon as the skull was opened at this point, the clot was found, its thickest point being exactly over the arm center, and the blood was removed, with the re-sult that the patient's life was saved. This is only one of hundreds of cases in made by many surgeons, both in Europe and America.

'The anti-vivisectionists have frequently denied that surgeons have learned any thing from such experiments. I state, with the greatest positiveness, that with-out the knowledge derived from experiments upon animals, which have demon strated the facts of cerebral localization I should never have been able to locat the clot in Mr. Alken's head and remov

it. "In view, therefore, of the evident and possible benefit of such experiments, trust that you will be willing to desis from further efforts at such repressive and, as I regard it, most inhumane cruel legislation."

J. A. Ely, of Perrineville, seeks to recov er $10,000 damages from his brother, Sta-phen D. Ely, of Cranbury, for alleged de-famation of character. The origin of the trouble was in a poem. Both parties are rhymesters of considerable fame in their respective neighborhoods. They are sons of Joseph J. Ely, the lawyer, surveyor and historian, who frequently wrote verse.

J. A. Ely, the complainant, in the Sprin of 1891 began the publication of a series of verses based on Aesop's Fables. Soon after the appearance of one entitled the "Fox and the Crow" in the Enterprise, a weekly newspaper then published by Mayor Richard D. Norton, of Hightstown, another version in verse of the fable was published in the same paper from the pen of Stephen D. Ely. in which his brother charges that the description of the cunning fox was intended as a personal alludon to himself. Because of litigation over the settlemen of their father's estate, in which the broth-ers and their three sisters have been involved for several years, the complainant volved for several years, the companiant asserts that the public would be likely to see in the poem a caricuture of the part played by him in these legal difficulties, and that the implication: thus set forth are of a slanderous nature. Stephen D. Ely has made a demurrer. In which he de-large that no parsonal allowing to his
