

CEO. C.'S TROUBLES

Mr. Brownell's Statesmanship Loses Luster.

DESERVED HERMANN AT EUGENE

Now He Seeks Aid and Comfort From Senator Fulton in His Hot Foot Canvass for the District Attorneyship.

The Hon. George C. Brownell, the eminent statesman of Clackamas, is having his troubles. Mr. Brownell is hot foot after the United States District Attorneyship. He hoped, by pulling Hermann through the convention at Eugene, that that gentleman would reciprocate by pulling for him. However, Mr. Brownell proved himself a "quitter" in that convention, and Mr. Hermann was nominated entirely without any boosts from the supposedly omniscient statesman from Clackamas.

The bright light of Brownell's statesmanship is belittled by that episode. Yesterday he went to Astoria to get aid and comfort from Senator Fulton, but a rainy day did not allow Senator Fulton to be in Portland, and so Mr. Brownell fled himself back to this city. Last night the two had an affectionate reunion, the first since the Senator returned nearly two months ago. The meeting was said to be a very gushy one on the part of the Clackamas statesman, and it is said also that he hugged the Senator and actually wept down the Senator's back.

Brownell Suffers a Relapse.

Mr. Brownell still has the District Attorneyship, had he stuck to Hermann through all the ups and downs and the thick and thin of the convention. His presence, which many men had come to regard as infallible, then showed up in a shocking manner. He showed that he had little tenacity or grit, and that a light solar-plexus will put him out of business. Mr. Brownell's reputation has suffered a dreadful relapse. The bright orb of his foxiness seems to have entered the shadow of the approaching eclipse.

The statesman has the "indorsement" of Senator Fulton for the Attorneyship. Had he stuck to his post of duty as chairman of the convention, instead of going off to bed, he would have had the "indorsement" of Hermann, too. Judge J. C. Moreland has the support of Senator Mitchell and of Representative Williamson.

It is quite likely that the support of Fulton and Hermann could have outweighed the influence of Mitchell and Williamson. Mitchell has doled out several good things, such as the United States Marshall's office to W. F. Matthews, and the office of Collector of Customs to L. L. Patterson, and he is holding Colonel D. M. Dunne as Collector of Internal Revenue. Senator Fulton is entitled to a share of the pie, and a slice like the District Attorneyship is about the size of Brother Brownell, to whom Senator Fulton has promised "indorsement."

Mitchell's Promise to Moreland.

Although Mitchell has pledged himself to Moreland, he could perhaps have squirmed out of this promise by saying that circumstances have altered the election of Fulton, which he could not resist. He might have pleaded that he could not stand in the way of Fulton, who clearly is entitled to recognition. He might have said that Moreland was inherited from Senator McBride, and that it came with the assignment of the Senatorship to Mitchell by McBride. Senator Mitchell has declared that the situation had entirely outgrown the circumstances under which the promise was given, even though the promise was given in writing.

But it does not appear that the way is open for all this to come to pass. If Fulton and Mitchell insist upon carrying out their respective promises, the election is drawn from the assumption that Hermann will be elected.

Wherefore the whole business, in the eyes of Mr. Brownell, is in a most pitiful situation. And the miserable contempts that brought it all about came from his fatal mistake of deserting Hermann in the hour of need and going to bed.

Brownell's Stand-In.

Here is an interesting exhibit: Mitchell likes Brownell, but will not support the cautious statesman; Fulton does not like him, but will support him; Mitchell admires Brownell so much as to call him the best politician in Oregon. Fulton is afraid of Brownell and knows that Brownell in the Legislature intrigued for his defeat.

The common talk is that Mitchell is the only man whom Brownell would not brow beat. Mr. Brownell is so proud of his faithfulness to the Senator Senator that he uses it to discredit the frequent stories about his "shiftiness." Mr. Brownell does not like Senator Mitchell as he does not like every man whom he meets. He may gaze into the Senator's face with those large soulful eyes; he may give the Senator's hands the velvet, moderate squeeze of his own and may even declare to the Senator that he "loves" him, but the twain know each other too well to go any further with their fond exhibitions. The connection between the two is so close that the story goes Mr. Brownell does not tell any lies to the Senator. Under these circumstances the politician asks: Is it any wonder that the Senator trusts George?

Senator Fulton's feelings toward Mr. Brownell are of a different kind. He is indebted to the statesman for the support Brownell gave him in the Legislature. But he knows that Brownell stayed by him not because Brownell loved him, but because the Clackamas gentleman could find nowhere else to go. Fulton was on pins and needles the "last night" last Brownell should jump away from him. George was so weak-kneed that he had to be supported by certain of Eugene merchants, among them being Senator Kuykendall, who braced him up as he held the gavel.

Yet there are many people who believe that Mr. Brownell, if he ever told the truth in his life, is telling the truth when he innocently and humbly denies all desire to occupy the warm and cozy office of District Attorney. They reason this way: George likes to be "it." If he gets tucked away in an office like that the people will forgive his "it." George likes to have the plaudits of the multitude tickle his tympanum. In an office like that he will have to get out of politics. Besides, he is not an able lawyer, in spite of his dazzling acts of statesmanship. The practice of law in a village is very different from the practice of law in Uncle Sam's dominion.

One Source of Opposition.

Right here it may be noted that Government employees who are anxious to have land grabbers prosecuted are opposing any man for District Attorney who might be influenced to prosecute gently. Many frauds are to be uncovered, and the Prosecuting Attorney will have plenty to do. Whatever may be the reasons for their preference head officers of the land department and inspectors who are sent out here are understood to desire some other gentleman for District Attorney than the Hon. George C. Brownell.

In spite of Mr. Brownell's great faculty

CELEBRATED AVER RIOR

Threatened Fight Checked at Weinhard Building.

NONUNION MEN ORDERED OFF

Contractor E. H. Moorehouse Is Not Allowed to Put His Painters to Work—Architect Lewis and Chief Hunt Interfere.

Architect Lewis' emphatic "No" and the presence of policemen headed by Chief Hunt was all that prevented a serious riot yesterday afternoon at the Weinhard building.

Armed with mob sticks, the bluecoats held back the crowd which tried to mingle in the threatened fight, and also held in check the angry carpenters who swarmed about two nonunion painters.

The critical moment in Lewis' case was all the prevented a serious riot yesterday afternoon at the Weinhard building.

Armed with mob sticks, the bluecoats held back the crowd which tried to mingle in the threatened fight, and also held in check the angry carpenters who swarmed about two nonunion painters.

TO HOLD BIG BENEFIT.

Theatrical Managers Unite to Help Actors' Home Fund.

The theatrical managers of the city decided at a meeting held yesterday that a grand benefit performance will be held at the Marquam Theater on the afternoon of Tuesday, April 15, to raise funds to help the Actors' Home fund. A committee of theatrical managers and actresses, to be located either in Colorado or Arizona, or whatever place a committee of specialists in the disease might decide upon. On the occasion named, every player in the city will doubtless contribute to the programme. Harry Corson, now playing at the Baker and Burns, and a plenty of hungry gentlemen are waiting for the delegation to act.

MAY BUILD LARGE HOTEL

S. S. Bailey, of Seattle, Is Considered in the Project.

S. S. Bailey, a well-known hotel man of Seattle and Spokane, who was until recently the proprietor of the Hotel North in the former city, is now in Portland.

Mr. Bailey is seriously considering the advisability of erecting a large hotel in this city. The project has been in the air for several days, but it has been looking over suitable locations for such a structure. Mr. Bailey requires a piece of ground not less than 100x100 feet, and possibly as large as half a block. His present plan is to erect a building of some 100,000 square feet, which will contain accommodations for at least 500 people.

ALL WOMEN HAVE A PLACE

Those of Wealth and Social Position Important to the Fair.

PORTLAND, April 13.—(To the Editor.)—Let I may be clearly understood, I wish to say a few more words in regard to woman's work for the Lewis and Clark Fair. In my words of approval of the appointment of Mrs. Weathered I do not have to say that I am in any measure undervaluing women of wealth and social position or that I consider their place in life to any degree a prescribed one. The charitable institutions, not alone in our own city, but the world over, stand in an everlasting monument to their good-nature and untiring efforts.

LABORERS IN A STRIKE

Men Who Work with Wheelbarrows and Hods Want Higher Pay.

Another strike in the building trades began yesterday morning. The laborers have laid down their wheelbarrows and hods and are out for higher wages. Nearly 100 were idle yesterday.

The laborers working for the brick contractors are most affected. The Master Bricklayers' Association declines to pay the higher scale demanded by the Laborers' Protective Association, and as a consequence almost half of the members of the union are on strike. The men working in cement and plaster have for the greater part been granted the higher scale and were not drawn into the difficulty.

Mucker Attempts Suicide.

SPOKANE, Wash., April 13.—(Special.)—Andrew Gugstom, a nonunion Swede mucker, became half crazed with fear tonight that union men were trying to kill him and tried to forestall them by hanging at his throat with a picket knife. He succeeded in making a number of bad cuts, but fell tonight and was taken to the hospital where he is being treated. He was taunted by union men.
