LOCALTEAM PLAYS GREAT BALL

Butler's Pitching Helps to Paralyse the Los Angeles Baseballists, While Corbett's Curves Are Easy for Everybody.

PACIFIC COAST LEAGUE. Yesterday's Scores. Portland, 5; Los Angeles, 0. San Francisco, 1; Sacrame Standing of the Clubs.

All hall to that trenchant right arm of Isaac Butler, and let's also stug praises of his digits that so cleverly curved those balls which were the means of dumping nine buckets of chicken-house paint into the camp of the Loo Loos. Will the 2000 happy fans ever forget yesterday's game? Will they ever forget the way that Brown brigade fell upon those benders that "Little Brother" Joe Corbett, B. B. S., good fellow, good baseballist, sent in? Think of it and ponder well. Certainly now there seems some real reason for the existence of the Browns, for that score of 5 to 0 looks as big to us here at home as a ripe and julcy watermelon to a coon whose finances are nit.

Not alone was Butler the nut and the kernel, too, for there was the lightning-like work of his infield behind him. There was Andy Anderson and Raidy and Shea, and it was Shea and Anderson who broke All hall to that trenchant right arm of like work of his instead was Andy Anderson and Haldy and Shea, And it was Shea and Anderson who broke the hearts of the Loo Loos when they shattered that hit-and-run game for the visitors. There was also the almost continuous swat of the ball and when the smoke of the battle cleared, "Little Brother" had been trounced for ten singles and a couple of double-sackers, which fell to Anderson's lot. Umpire Levy was at his best in spite of the abuse which Manager Dillon heaped upon him. Certainly Levy is good-natured. If he wasn't he would have punched the Los Angeles manager. No official of the game, no matter how off-color his rulings are, need stand for the insults such as a contract of the color of the stand of the loss of are, need stand for the insults such as were passed out to Levy by Dillon during were passed out to Levy by Dillon during the early part of the game. Dillon kept abusing Levy until he was called good and hard. Dillon seemed to realize that he had reached his limit, for after the second inning there was hardly a peep

If the Browns fought hard to win Thurs If the Browns fought hard to win Inurs-day's game they fought still harder to bring about that shut-out. Only once did the Loo Loos have a look in. That came in the eighth inning after two men had been sent to the morgue. Corbett and Ross both flow out to Anderson, the catch of Corbett's ball being an extremely hard chance, when Whoeler, Smith and Dillon all three hit safely to left field. This bombardment of Ikes' curves sent the Browns' stock down with a terrific bump. Right here the nerve specialist was threatened with a fortune, for if Cravath's wallop just outside the right-fence line had struck fair it would have cleaned the bases cleaner that a charwoman could have done. The ball caromed to the club-A sigh, half groan, half wail, rose, house. A sigh, haif groan, haif wall, rose stifled with suppressed anguish. For ar instant Huriburt raced like mad after the sphere, and then when the ball struck that welled and widened until it became a delirious, screaming howl of delight. Once, twice and thrice Butler shot the ball towards the waiting Cravath. These were fouls. Then, at last, the bat and ball met, and the sphere salled toward Van Burenville and into the deacon's

The way that crowd yelled was scandalous. Staid business men flung themselves upon their seat companions, women giggled, shricked and shouted shrill compilments to the Browns. Everybody aughed and talked to nobody and everybody-in a word the whole assembly be came a unit of friendliness.

There was yet another inning to play. The Browns made a gallant bid for more runs, but they were killed off trying. Andy Anderson started things going with a neat two-bagger. Raidy singled to left, but he was caught trying to steal. Butler got down to first, and, believing he was safe, was caught off the switch by Dillon. It was while Hoy was taying for things that the crowd got another scare. Hoy had fouled several times. Finally one went up that both Andrews and Shea started for. Shea old not hear Jay call to him and they came together with great force. Shen's head struck Andrews on the fore-head and almost knocked him out. Jay saw more stars in those few seconds than the most experienced star-gazer sees in a lifetime. The plucky third guardian went to the grass, but was up and in the game before the count. When the game got under way again, Hoy was cut across the waistband by one of Ike's inshoots and he walked to first. Toman followed, but a long fly to Speck Hurlburt sent him to taking off his hobnails. Spies reached for an outshot and it flew to Nadeau. Then it was Joe Corbett's turn. That gentlemanly ballplayer tried twice, then he jolted one that wanted to go over the right-field fence, but it hadn't the legs and instead it fell into Hurlburt's mitt and the shutout game became history.

The Browns began to show their batting eyes in the first inning. Hess and Nadeau both found Corbett for singles, but there were no results, for the Deacon, who had reached first on Ross' error, overran the beg at third and was caught. In the second inning a quick double from Dillon to Smith checked the result of Andrews hit. The Deacon got his fourth body wallop in as many games, then singles by Andrews and Raidy brought in the first two runs. Brother Joe came in for a beating in the fifth. Hurlburt, Hess. Van Buren and Nadeau all drew out neat singles. Andrews drove out a that brought home a run. The Then, just to help things along, Andy Anderson knocked out his first double-sacker, making in all five hits, and boosting the score three Corbett was only hit twice after nning. In the meantime Butler was this fining. In the meantime Butler was pitching his gilt-edge best, and always behind him was the fast work of the en-tire team. Vigneux was sick and out of the game and Hess took up his place at first, acquitting himself in a manner which stamps him as an all-round ball player. Again in this game the work of Antix Anderson stood out we have Andy Anderson stood out as big as a barn. He handled seven putouts and acted as assistant undertaker on two other occasions. Van Buren had four chances. He also had charge of the as assistant undertaker on Huriburt took care of three flies.

VERY SILENT BUNCH. Jack Marshall Said to Have Secured

New Material for Browns. Jack Marshall dipped out of town ouple of suns ago, and now it is rumored he has returned with a dozen and a half of pitchers and that long-promised firstbaseman. Whether this is true or not cannot be learned, for the Brown management is so silent-so awfully silentwhether they are doing anything or not, so do not be surprised if there is a strange face at the initial sack for the Browns. Last night a telegram from President Lucas or somebody else told the story of Jack Marshall's wanderings over several states looking for baseball material, and that he (Marshall) had found what he was looking for. The new first guardian, so the rumor runs, is either from Omaha or Albina, perhaps from Oregon City, maybe from Los Angeles. At any rate, he has a batting average of 1999 and a fielding average of something over a couple of thousand. His name, it is alleged, is Misley. This may not be the way Jack Marshail spells it, or the first-baseman himself, but twill serve for the present writing. Who 'twill serve for the present writing. Who the twirlers are is known only to Mar-shall, and the president of the Browns took their names home with him and looked them up. locked them up.

If the story of the arrival of a first-base man is true, then certainly this is good news, for such a player will be a welcome addition to the Browns. A couple of left-handed spitchers will also be duly welcomed to the fold. med to the fold.
