OREGON A GOOD STATE FOR NUTS.—In response to a request from H. E. Dorsch, a box of very fine Spanish chestnuts was sent by J. M. Seltzer, of Woodburn, to the permanent exhibit yesterday. Some of the nuts are still in the burrs and others are husked, and Mr. Dorsch says handsome or better cannot be found anywhere. They are not to be eaten raw like the little sweet American chestnuts, but either boiled or roasted are much used in Germany, France, Spain and Italy and are highly esteemed. They are practically the same as those seen in places about the city, usually called Italian chestnuts. None of the nut-producing trees are native to Oregon. The only nuts found by early settlers being the hazelnut and chinquapin. Contrary to a very general opinion, this state is well adapted to growing most kinds of nut trees. Chestnut and black walnut trees are common and produce well and there are several flourishing orchards of English walnuts in Yamhill County. Pecans, butternuts, almonds and almonds do well here and fine samples of all grown by H. E. Dorsch are to be seen at the permanent exhibit. A few days ago a lot of hickory nuts as large and fine as are produced in Illinois were sent in by a man who found a hickory tree growing beside a street on the East Side. There is a large tree growing in the center of the block on which Vincent Cook has his residence which has been a source of wonderment to many.
