

TO GUARD SCHOOL PUPILS

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH BULLETIN TELLS HOW

Instructions to Teachers Give Simple Warnings as to the Care of Their Charges.

"School children and how to guard their health" is the subject matter of a bulletin issued by the State Board of Health.

"It is important," Secretary of the board and author of the bulletin, for teachers to be informed in these matters.

Dr. Hutchinson is preparing another bulletin on vaccination. The board takes the stand that vaccination is necessary, should be compulsory and should be rigidly required.

"Indeed," said Dr. Hutchinson, "vaccination is indispensable, as all leading medical authorities agree."

As the most valuable instrument for teaching sickness, the thermometer is just printed mentions the thermometer.

Every school building should be supplied with the thermometer and all teachers should be instructed in its use.

The instrument needs to be kept clean. The tongue and left there from one to three minutes. The normal temperature is 98.6 degrees, but if the reading goes above 100 degrees the child should be brought at once with a note to the parents suggesting the need of a physician.

No child with a temperature over 100 degrees is fit to study, whether the disorder be dangerous or not.

Physician Should Inspect Schools.

As an "ideal state of affairs" the board suggests the employment of a school physician "who should make a brief daily tour of inspection of every schoolroom, in Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, St. Louis and many other cities and towns.

Teachers are instructed to watch carefully for skin eruptions, since a large proportion of infectious diseases are attended by such symptoms.

"If there is an eruption on any part of the body, when an elevation of temperature is present, that child should be prevented from mingling with the rest of the pupils until a physician has examined the case.

Indeed, the occurrence of an elevation of temperature, or the appearance of an eruption—should cause the child to be sent home and isolated.

Eruptions occurring in other than febrile conditions are almost invariably contagious, such as those of the itch, ringworm, and many forms of eczema; especially is this the case if the eruption be found in the scalp.

Bore throat is cited as a sufficient cause for keeping the patient out of school, "but because the disease interferes with study and because the vast majority of all sore throats from whatever cause are contagious.

The fourth symptom for which teachers should watch after temperature, eruptions and sore throats is headache, wackache, headache or pain of the eyes.

"Any febrile condition in children is usually accompanied by more or less headache."

Classrooms ought to be thoroughly fumigated at least once a month regularly with formalin or sulphur, and immediately after the discovery of any case of infectious disease among the children in the room.

Slates Breed Disease.

Slates are denounced as breeders of disease and an "unspeakable habit."

"From every point of view pads of cheap paper and lead pencils are better than scratchy, filthy slates and slate pencils. Lead pencils are less liable to break and to do bodily injury by going up noses and into ears.

Children should have individual pencils and be prevented in every possible way from exchanging pencils with each other, as diseases may be readily spread in this manner.

When used, they should be thoroughly fumigated in a box filled with formalin, as can be very easily and cheaply done.

A useful precaution at times, especially where there is any suspicion of diphtheria, tetch, or other contagious disease, is to fumigate thoroughly the classroom with its hats, caps and wigs in position, during one of the school sessions.

"It need hardly be said that any condition producing patches, boils, pimples, or rashes, especially upon the scalp of children, ought to promptly result in their exclusion from the school until an examination has been made by some competent physician. Nearly all diseases attended by eruptions or scales, especially of the scalp, are contagious, and most of them are fatal."

The public drinking cup and the public toilet ought really to be abolished altogether, as they may become the means of communicating at least five or six acute contagious diseases, such as diphtheria, tetch, scarlet fever, typhoid fever, cholera, and typhus. In addition to the systematic diseases communicated by the cup, a number of skin, scalp and eye diseases may be communicated by the use of such a vessel.
