Can the lady with the wavy blonde hair and heavenly blue eyes impart a more marked degree of erudition to the unsodistinguished pupil in a given space of time than one of her less favored sisters? Is the teacher with the retrousse nose and vivacious cast of countenance superior in teaching qualities to the lady with the Greeian mold of face?

To Repair Weidler-Street Bridge.

Prospects are very favorable for the on Weidler street and Williams being put in good order for travel long. This structure, which is 200 before long. feet long and 30 feet in height, has been in a dangerous condition for some time, and has been blocked to team travel. This has been a great inconvenience to the public, as it is one of the main avenues of traffic on the East Side. City Engineer Elliott had determined to barri-cade it entirely, so as to stop cars running over it, but the beginning of this has brought the property owners inter-ested to terms, and they are anxious to have necessary repairs made. It has been arranged that the property owners at the four corners of the intersection of Weidler street and Williams avenue shall pay Suburban Rallway Company, whose line crosses the bridge, shall pay $300, and that the city shall contribute $300 or $400 in labor, which will serve to put the bridge. in good condition to last for some years ne of the property owners han their contributions yesterday, and as soon as all the money promised has been paid in the work of repair will begin. The structure will be thoroughly overhauled, and new timbers, stringers, etc., will be put in where necessary and a new deck will be laid. The construction of the blockade has been ordered stopped by City Engineer Eillott, and it is probable that the work of repair will be commenced in

"STRONG-ARM" MEN WAYLAY JAMES VARNEY.

Keen-Sighted Rounders Spot Him In Saloon and Hold Him Up Near Union Station.

On Sixth street little more than one block from the Union Depot James Varney, a logger from Lewis River, was robbed of $50 by two strong-arm men before 11 o'clock last evening

It was the old story of the logger with the roll, the keen-sighted rounders who spotted him in a Burnside-street saloon, the men behind the post, the gun and the inevitable transfer of the legal tender. This time the highwaymen were more daring than most of their kind.

While dozens of people, many hacks and busses were passing on their way to the depot, the men relieved him of the greater part of his month's wages, with which he had planned to have a good time in Portland. But now the robbers will have the good time, while Varney goes back to the camp a sadder but a wiser man in the ways of the North End. Varney's story as told to the detectives was that he had spent the evening around the Burnside-street saloons. He did not know that he had been watched, and was sure that he had never "flashed his roll." Making his way toward the depot about 10:30 he found Sixth street very dark. As near as he can tell it was between Glisar and Hoyt streets that he passed a thick telegraph pole.

Behind the telegraph pole was a man who, suddenly stepping in front of ney, caught the surprised logger under the chin with his crooked arm. In the other hand he held a pistol which he was careful that the victim should see. PORTLAND, Nov. 8 .- (To the Editor.) -A gentleman in New Jersey writes a ok. Being a theologian, he does what is paid to do: He writes a book on a theologic theme. The Oregonian, be ing a newspaper, refers to this event, as is its business, being paid for the news it can furnish its subscribers. So far, commending said effort on the part of the author, but also indulges in 'showing up" the heathen; that is, the nations who do not draw their theological ideas from the same school. The undersigned objected to this abuse of heathens and their efforts, as it does not prove anything about the book in question. He also regards this comparison wrong, unless undoubted data can be ground is covered. Knowing, as I do, that the editor is not a champion of Thomas Paine, I cannot refrain from defending this brave man against such an attack. A man who loves freedom as did he, who sits by the campfire writing "The Crisis" for his disheartened com when gloom reigned in the Continental Army, is no commonplace man "These are the times that try men's souls." Is that shallow? The British bishop, Landhoff, said to Paine: "There is a philosophical sublimity in some of your ideas when speaking of the Creator of song.

"In the old Jordan & Marsh days, she feet man, neither are any of us, but Mr. Lathrop does not like freedom. I am afraid that theologians wor tate to defend his position. An argument based solely on Sunday school phi-lesophy is evidently limited in its resources, however beneficial its moral pre then contending for a wrong. Hegel held that freedom was the aim of civilization Jesus offered his testimony, too-"The truth shall make you free." Bondage, mental or political, has ever been advocated by tyrants, political or spiritual I believe that no growth can take place are not negative qualities. If they were, the inmates of the penitentiaries would be our most moral class, for they are denied the chance of practicing the grossest immoralities. When man feels without freedom. Morality and virtue he is free, his life becomes one of per petual choice. He will either follow the divine impulse of his heart and conscience, or he will follow the desires of his animal instincts. He then grows in wisdom, strength and godliness in ex-act proportion to his success in con-sciously obeying his best impulses. If we cannot agree on the essential ele-ments of Christianity, how can we agree on the details? Mr. Lathrop states that this is no Tom Paine country. I state likewise that this is no Ponathan Edwards country. When an immigrant lands at Eilis Island, the government officials examine him as to his fitness for entering this land of freedom. He is not saked whether he is a follower of Paine. asked whether he is a follower of Paine or Edwards; only as to his soundness of body and mind. Is he healthy? Is he moral? Now, Paine and Edwards taught morality, though they did agree on the relative virtue of church dogmas. Paine, we are told, was not a man of much learning. True; neither were the 12 fishermen whom the Gallilean chose as his messengers. The question of morality is not one only of learning, though learning is an aid, and nowledge a power for good. Mr. Lathrop and the writer have evidently studied what little science the have crossed in different schools. I have never learned that whenever anything is free it is stagnant and worthless. When atoms, or rather molecules, are fine, as in a crystal, there is stagnation. Only in the case of liberated molecules could a rose grow, rain form and fall, or vegetation decay and nourish a new crop It requires more rashness than scientists make use of to heedlessly accuse a man of believing in just those things he rejects. I state deliberately that I do not believe in miracles. All events are in accordance with law. No grain dust ever moved a millionth part of a millimetre except through the operation of natural law. We may not always understand the law so as to account for all events, or phenomena, but this is our

All this was off the original point in question. My contention was, and is, this: that when a theologian writes book on a subject which few, if an but theologians care for, on such theme as the incarnation, it is unnecessary for a partisan to seize the opportunity to abuse all mankind who believe differ-Much of the unhappiness in nor Christian countries referred to by Mr Lathrop is undoubtedly true. Those people may be even werse than that. However, I fail to see how that helps the gridiron dogma. The cussedness of the heathen does not prove a Christlike tharacter of church countries. We find a few black spots there, too.

have it, to medieval dogmas? If so, Watts, the inventor of the steam engine, was inspired by the dogma of original sin. Copernicus and Kepler unraveled the secrets of planetary motion by aid of immaculate conception. Franklin and Galvani stumbled on electricity through vicarious atonement. Morse and Edison had their intellects clarified after saturating themselves with the creed of infant damnation. Roentgen discovered the X-ray after professing total depravity.

Thus will the scientists of the future give us flying machines, rain-making de-vices, and the art of tempering copper and soldering aluminum, only when they adopt faith in eternal damnation or some other equally refined dogma.
