

MARTIN IS GUILTY

Indian Blacksmith Convicted of Manslaughter.

JURY RETURNS THE VERDICT

Romance and Tragedy Are Intermingled in the Indian Feud That Resulted in the Killing of U. S. Grant.

The jury in the case of Albert Martin, the Indian blacksmith, accused of the murder of U. S. Grant, an Indian Justice of the Peace of the Siletz reservation, returned a verdict last night of manslaughter. The case was under consideration for seven hours by the jurors before a decision could be reached. A portion of the jury, it is said, held out for murder in the first degree, but a compromise was made upon manslaughter.

The verdict was returned into court a few minutes before 6 o'clock. The prisoner listened to the reading of the verdict without the slightest show of concern, and refused to talk about his fate. Apparently it worried him a little, for on the way to the jail he laughed and talked freely about other matters.

Cause of the Feud.

Romance and tragedy are strangely intermingled in the Indian feud that is said to be the cause of the recent killing of Grant. Since the trial of Martin and Logan on the charge of murdering the Indian official, Logan and Martin have been made to some tribal troubles between the Joshua, of which Martin and Logan are members, and the Alsea, of which Grant is a member. Hints were thrown out in the evidence that there was blood between the two tribes that gave birth to personal enmity between the Alsea and those accused of the crime. What the cause of this ill-feeling was has not been unfolded to the court, but by means of much persuasion the Alsea were induced to tell the story. From their statements, punctuated with many gestures and strange facial contortions, it appears that Grant, as the leader of the Alsea tribe, incurred the everlasting enmity of the Joshua by his official actions as policeman, relative to two murder cases in which Joshua Indians were killed, and their slayers were allowed to go free. Logan, the hated Indian official, was the one who was killed by one of the murdered Joshua. Since then the Joshua have harbored a grudge against the Alsea. It is claimed, and this enmity was particularly cherished by Logan and Martin, against Grant, because of the fact that the men murdered, whose slayers were allowed to go free, were relatives of the accused men. It is to this old feud that the malice and motive in the recent crime is attributed.

The ill-feeling first started when Indian Tom, a cousin of Martin's, was killed in a fight with a half-breed redskin from another reservation. The Joshua donned war paint, and went about to annihilate Indian justice according to the custom of their forefathers, when Grant, who was policeman, spirited the half-breed away to Toledo, where he would be safe. The accused man was afterwards captured, it being held that he acted in self-defense. This, it is said, gave rise to a hatred between Martin and Grant.

Grant Aroused Bitter Hatred. At a later time a brother of Logan's was shot and killed by a saloon man in Toledo during a fight. Logan was cleared upon testimony that the Indian attempted to shoot him. This aroused the ire of Logan. It is said, and he attempted to shoot Grant to inform against the saloon man for selling liquor to Indians. It appears that Grant had been getting his supply of "firewater" at this saloon, and he refused to give information. This, it is claimed, made Logan a bitter enemy of the Indian officer. The climax was capped and the height of insult was heaped upon tribal pride when Grant, the hated enemy of the Joshua, was wooed and married the widow of Martin's dead cousin, Indian Tom. It called forth frequent threats of murder.

Evidence was introduced during the trial of Martin to the effect that on the fatal night Martin and Grant were heard quarreling, and the name of Grant's wife was mentioned. Logan testified that the two had words about her, but he did not know what the nature of the dispute was.

Wrongs Magnified by Liquor. In the closing of Martin's trial yesterday morning the motive and malice of the crime were attributed to the personal and tribal feeling between the dead man and the Indian accused of the crime. District Attorney Hall argued that the evidence went to show that Martin had nursed the grudge against Grant, that under the influence of liquor his wrongs, or imaginary wrongs, were magnified, and he seized an opportunity to carry out the threats he was alleged to have made against the life of Grant.

The jury was instructed that either of the three venets murder in the first degree, manslaughter, or acquittal, could be returned, and the jurors retired at 11:15 A. M. to consider the case.

Abel Logan to Be Tried.

The afternoon session of court was taken up in the selection of jurors to hear the case against Abel Logan. A large number of the talesmen examined had decided opinions about Indians that disqualified them for service upon the jury. The latter will probably be secured this morning and the trial of the case will commence. A strange feature of this case is that the witnesses who were for the prosecution during Martin's trial will now be on the side of the defense, and those who testified for Martin will become the Government's witnesses.

The red-skinned witnesses who have been lounging about the Courthouse, smoking cigarettes and jabbering in Indian lingo, lost no time yesterday afternoon in making a demand for witness fees as soon as Martin's case was placed in the hands of the jury. The redskins kept the clerks, Deputy Marshals and every one else about the building fully occupied explaining that payday would not come until both cases had been completed.

Slow Progress on East Side Line.

Slow progress is being made upon the new East Pine-street line of the Portland Railway Company. Deterred by rainy weather and by the pressure of other work, the construction gang is moving slowly along East Tenth street. The rails are laid almost to East Pine street at present. On the Union-avenue line another block of double track is being laid, so that two lines of rails will extend north to the Sullivan-gulch bridge.

Docket for December Term.

The docket for the December term of the Federal Court was arranged by Judge Sellinger yesterday. Eight cases are on the docket and the prospects are that the time of the court will be pretty well occupied in hearing the cases. The land case against McKinley, Ware and Pater are set for trial on December 14, and no other cases are scheduled for hearing after that before December 23. The docket is as follows: The United States vs. James Thompson, continued for term; the United States vs. Howard Garner, continued for the term; the United States vs. Asa B. Thompson, hearing continued until December 1; Jefferson Hougham vs.

Consolidated Bonanza Gold Mining Company, hearing of demurrer set for December 4; United States vs. McKinley, Ware and Pater, trial set for Monday, December 15; N. McKinley vs. James B. Hemford, trial set for December 27; W. W. Ryal vs. J. E. Ferguson et al., trial set for December 21; George W. Bebee vs. the Crown Paper Company, trial set for December 22.

TO SWEEP STREETS BY HAND.

New Machine is Tested by City Officials.

A small street-sweeping machine, operated by hand, made by Superintendent Donaldson, of the Street Cleaning Department, was tested on the upper end of Morrison street at noon yesterday in the presence of Mayor Williams, Councilman H. W. Goddard, of the Street Cleaning Committee, Lewis Russell and others with very satisfactory results.

When Mr. Russell came home from Edinburg last Summer he suggested to Superintendent Donaldson the advisability of using hand-sweeping machines on smooth streets, as he had seen done in Edinburg and other cities. He was so enthusiastic over the idea that he offered to pay for one machine himself if necessary in order to have a test made.

Messrs. Goddard and Howell, of the Street Cleaning Committee, investigated the matter last Spring, but as at that time most of the asphalt streets were full of holes, it was thought best not to attempt the use of hand machines until the pavement had been repaired, and the repairs are now completed and a number of streets are in good order, the committee decided to make the trial, and Superintendent Donaldson was authorized to build one, which he did on his own plan.

The machine looks like an exaggerated carpet-sweeper mounted on a pair of bicycle wheels. The broom is of rattan, about a foot and a half across and three feet long, and is driven at a high rate of speed. It brushes all the dirt back into an iron box.

This box is provided with handles, by which the machine is pushed along, and when it is full can be pulled out of the frame and emptied into a stationary receptacle and then replaced and the sweeping continued.

The present method of sweeping streets by horse machines is not entirely satisfactory to the city officials. The streets are swept each night and before noon the streets are littered with rubbish, which remains for the rest of the day. It is estimated that one man with this machine can sweep six or eight blocks per day, and what is more to the point, keep them clean.

Receptacles will be provided at intervals along the street in which the sweepings collected by the machine will be deposited, and these boxes will be emptied into a dumpcart, which follows for that purpose. As the experiment yesterday was considered a success, a sufficient number of these hand-machines will probably be built to sweep Third, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, Stark, Washington, Alder and Morrison streets, and other streets which may later be covered with asphalt, brick or wood-block pavements. This will enable Superintendent Donaldson to use the horse machines on other streets, which have heretofore been unavoidably neglected, and these power brooms can be sent to the East Side oftener than at present. The cost of the hand sweeper was about $50.

NINE IDENTIFY HIM.

Hold-Up Victims Say L. Connors is the Highwayman.

If the evidence of nine Italians can be relied upon, two of the daring criminals who have been terrorizing Portland for the past few weeks by repeated burglaries and hold-ups, are confined in the City Jail. L. Connors, the gentlemanly individual who hails from Denver, and in whose trunk were found papers showing that he was engaged in that city in a business of considerable size, is one of the prisoners. The other is Bert Coble, known by the police to be a friend of the gentlemanly burglar.

All the victims of recent hold-ups that have been Connors declare he is the image of the man who got their money. Nine Italians, who were in the South Portland Exchange saloon at the time it was robbed, visited the City Jail yesterday. Connors and Coble were led out before them, and every man declared that the man who had robbed them was the man they were looking for. The proprietor of the saloon, is so thoroughly convinced that the right men are arrested that he has consented to make the charge against them in his own name.

H. M. Halles, who took a shot at a fleeing burglar at his home in Albina some days ago, visited the station yesterday, and when shown the suspect, told Chief Hunt he was sure Connors and the other would count as but one man on the census lists. However, he would not be willing to take the stand against the man, he said.

M. E. GORDON TO BE TRIED. Deposed Sewer Inspector to Have Hearing Tomorrow.

M. E. Gordon, the Sewer Inspector deposed by City Engineer Elliott several days ago, will be tried by the Civil Service Commission tomorrow afternoon. The City Engineer will present his evidence and the reasons for Gordon's suspension, and the accused inspector will bring forward his evidence.

Gordon was charged by City Engineer Elliott with neglect of duty. Besides this, so Mr. Elliott says, he spent much of his time looking up contracts for sewer contractors, which is, of course, against the rules of civil service.

Sidewalks for Park Blocks. Sidewalks are at last to surround the Park blocks. Those from Salmon street to Clay have been provided, and the North Portland blocks will also shortly be attended to by the Park Board. Cement sidewalks, four feet in width, will be laid lengthwise of the blocks. At the ends six feet width will be placed. By the order of the Park Board, Smyth & Howard, contractors, have been awarded contracts to place sidewalks around these six blocks at a total cost of $195.25.

Unlawful to Have Venison. Several persons have inquired why there is no venison in the markets these days, and want to know if there are no deer in Oregon. There are plenty of deer in this state and they are increasing rapidly since the practice of hunting them for their skins has been stopped, but the close season for bucks extends from November 1 to July 15 of the following year, and for does to August 15. During this close season it is unlawful to hunt deer or have venison in possession for barter or exchange, so it is not possible to have any on the markets at this time. There are more than a few deer along the hills west of town between this city and Linton, which used to be a favorite hunting place for them, and the deer are being allowed. A prominent business man of this city, still a young man, has shot many deer along the section mentioned and says that now he could jump up two or three deer there any day. Less than 15 years ago his hound ran a deer down the upper end of Washington street and it jumped down into the canyon where the Exposition building now stands and disappeared. He never could find out what became of it till a few days ago when N. A. King told him that he shot the deer and took it home. A. N. King at that time had a tenyard where the field of the Multnomah Athletic Club now is, and his boys secured a number of deer there which were being chased by hounds and plunged down into the creek there to escape. One would hardly imagine now that deer were chased by hounds down Washington street 15 years ago.

Gypsies Go to San Francisco. The gypsies driven out of Albina by the combined action of the police and health committee are bound for San Francisco, but will probably take their time on the way and be a long time reaching that city. They applied to Chief Hunt for a letter of recommendation to the Chief of Police of San Francisco, and he told them that if they applied to him he would give him his opinion of them. The people of the towns and villages along the road should be warned to pass them along, for they are horrible nuisances and contaminate all they touch, or even look at. It is hardly possible to push them on the earth, but it does seem a pity that the Terrible Turk had not mistaken them for Christians when he was putting things to rights after his ideas in Bulgaria.

DOCTORS ARE SLOW

Find Fracture in Man's Skull After He Dies.

THOUGHT HE WAS DRUNK

Police Pick John Larsen up on Street Unconscious, Put Him in Cell, and Say No Such Person Is in Jail.

After being picked up on the street with his skull broken, taken to the city jail and lying unconscious in a cell for two days, during which time he was treated for delirium tremens, John Larsen was finally removed to the Good Samaritan Hospital, where he died yesterday.

During the time he was confined in the city jail his 14-year-old son, who is a messenger boy, searched the city high and low for him, but was unable to find a trace of his father. Owing to his unconscious condition at the time he was brought in, Larsen was unable to give his name, and when the boy inquired at the station for his father he was told, "There is no such man here." Finally in his anxiety the boy asked to be allowed to go into the cell and look at the prisoner. His father's helpless form was lying near the stove on the hard cement floor, and he hastened to have him removed to a hospital.

Larsen was well known to the saloon-going people of Portland. He had worked in a number of saloons as a "waiter." Until a few days before the accident that cost him his life he was employed in the Peerless saloon at Third and Ash streets. On November 12 he was drinking and became intoxicated. As he was wandering past Fourth and Stark streets he fell and struck his head violently on the pavement. A large crowd quickly gathered around, and the man was moved to the baggage transfer rooms. The patrol wagon was summoned, and he was taken to the city jail. He was unconscious at the time, but his breath smelled so strong of whiskey and his actions so closely resembled those of a man "dead drunk" that the officers regarded his case as nothing out of the ordinary. He was not able to give his name before he was locked up, but it was thought he would soon sleep off his drunk and be all right.

During the night an effort was made to arouse him and get his name, but he could not answer any questions. Before morning the jailer became alarmed as to his condition, and after consulting the Captain summoned the City Physician. The fracture in his skull did not show plainly, and his actions were so similar to those of a man suffering from delirium tremens that he was treated for this ailment. Three or four days during the few days the doctor was called, but the patient grew rapidly worse.

In the meantime Larsen's son had missed him, and knowing of his father's shortcomings, immediately went to the police station to look for him. As there was no charge against him, the word discharged appeared on the police docket opposite his name, and there was nothing in the records to show that the man was still sick and in the cell. The Captain, looking at the docket, told the boy that John Larsen had been there, but had been discharged. When his son finally found him, he was given every possible care, but could not be saved.

Dr. Cardwell, who was called after the man was removed to the hospital, did not believe that his patient had delirium tremens, and after his death yesterday held a post mortem. It was found that his skull had been cracked, and that he died from cerebral hemorrhage.

Coroner Finley was asked to investigate the treatment the old man had received, and last night said:

"I do not think that any one is to blame in the matter. I think that every one concerned did all that they could. The city jail is very poorly arranged to handle such cases, and the city officials should take some steps to improve the conditions. I do not hesitate to say that the city officials are responsible for that man's death. I believe he could have been saved if he had had proper treatment."

"Instead of putting him in a good, clean room, the officers put him in the only place they had, a cell with a large number of criminals, and he was not to have been kicked and beaten as he lay unconscious in the cell, for his body was black and blue with bruises."
