PORTLAND export trade to foreign countries reached a total of $730,417 in the month of December, according to the Portland Commercial Bulletin. The

From Seattle and Tacoma.

From San Francisco.

From Portland.

This total exceeded the November imports to the extent of $10,897, which was more than twice as large as in the corresponding month last year. The exports to the Orient, which was the largest class of trade, were valued at $412,482, or over $100,000 more than in December last year. The exports to Europe amounted to $284,093, or about the same as in November. The exports to Africa were valued at $89,173, or over $20,000 less than in November. The exports to South America amounted to $44,450, or over $10,000 less than in November. The exports to the Orient were valued at $412,482, or about the same as in November. The exports to Europe amounted to $284,093, or about the same as in November. The exports to Africa were valued at $89,173, or about the same as in November. The exports to South America amounted to $44,450, or about the same as in November.

Full details of all classes of trade appear in the Commercial Bulletin, which is published weekly. The bulletin contains a full report of the export trade for each month, together with a detailed statement of the import trade for each month.

Portland, Oregon, Friday, January 1, 1894.

No. 1,423.