DEATH OF PIONEER FLORETT—W. G. Wallace, a pioneer florist of Portland, died last night of paralysis at his home, 725 East Stark street. He had been stricken two months, and as he was 69 years old, his family had no hopes of his ultimate recovery, but they did not expect his death at the time of its occurrence. W. G. Wallace was a Scotchman by birth and came to America in 1854 and shortly afterward to Oregon. He was married twice, the children by his first wife being Mrs. G. G. Fenneberg, of Toledo, O.; M. Wallace, of San Francisco, and Thomas E. Wallace, of Portland. He had only one child by his second wife, a daughter, now one year old. The deceased was a well-known florist and was at one time the superintendent of Portland's parks.

DRUGGIST UNDER SERIOUS CHARGE—Charles A. Watson, keeper of a drug store at 28 North Third street, was arrested yesterday morning on a warrant charging him with selling morphine without an order from a physician. The arrest was the outcome of the arraignment of Watson in the Police Court Tuesday. The week, J. L. Lawrence, said he had been working for Watson, receiving part pay in the drug to which he is a slave. At the time Judge Hogue remarked that a druggist who sold drugs for use by morphine and opium users are contributing to the downfall of the unfortunate. He caused the issuance of the warrant for Watson's arrest. Watson pleaded guilty. He was required to leave $100 for his release pending trial.

BURGLAR DRAWS SMALL WAGES—Some unscrupulous burglar wasted several dollars worth of good muscle early yesterday morning for 5 cents, a pipe and an old hat. The collection totals in value 20 cents. The burglary was at Albert Klein's meat market on East Burnside street. In order to get inside the store, the burglar bored holes in the rear door and then whittled with his knife until he had cut an opening large enough to admit his body. Several hours' energetic hustling must have been required to accomplish this feat, and it is evident the burglar expected quite a haul. Everything in the place was overhauled, but no intruder could find that interested him were five copper pennies, a cheap pipe and an old hat. The police were notified.

EXAMINATIONS FOR PHYSICIANS—A special examination for admission to the medical profession of Oregon began yesterday and will last till Friday noon. It is being held by the State Board of Medical Examiners and is attended by the recent graduates of the medical departments of the Willamette and State Universities and some others. Dr. W. H. Saylor and Dr. W. E. Carril held their examinations yesterday. Dr. A. B. Gillis and Dr. H. B. Curry will hold theirs today and Dr. Byron E. Miller will hold his tomorrow morning.

ST. JOHNS MAY GET WOOLEN MILLS—In preparation for rebuilding on a larger scale the Portland Woollen Mills, the factory of which at Sellwood was burned out some time ago, yesterday filed supplementary articles of incorporation with the County Clerk increasing the capital stock of the company to $500,000. The rebuilding has been delayed by the alluring propositions made to the company by various suburbs of the city outside of Sellwood which have tried to get the mill to locate there. It is understood that St. Johns is somewhat in the lead just now. The mill burned was worth $100,000 and employed 150 people.

ALPINE HINES IS A DISAPPEARED—Alpine Hines, a carpenter living in the Winters block on the East Side, disappeared the night before last, leaving no trace of his whereabouts. His wife waited until last night for him to reappear, but hearing nothing from him finally informed the police. He is a slightly built, light-haired man, 28 years old. He has a wife and a 14-year-old boy. No reason can be found for his disappearance.

NOT GOOD FOR THE MONEY—R. J. Olson, in the character of "sport," persuaded the barkeeper at the Royal Cafe on Stark street to cash a $40 check which was made out to him by one E. Peterson. But when the check was turned in at the bank there was no money forthcoming and Mr. Olson was sought. He was arrested yesterday in Salem and will answer to the charge of forgery.

SELECTED MASTER AINSWORTH CHAPTER—Wallace McCannant has been elected master of the Ainsworth Chapter of Rose Croix, the 18th degree of Masonry in Portland. He has a number of appointments to make, which he has not yet announced.

WOMAN'S CLUB MEETS TOMORROW—The regular meeting of the Woman's Club tomorrow will be devoted to Shakespeare and his writings. An eloquent address will be read by various members, and Mrs. Grace Watt Ross will give a review of the year's work accomplished by the Shakespeare department of the club study. Miss Agnes Watt will sing old English and Shakespearean songs. This programme takes the place of the one arranged for on the yearly calendar, and is expected to be of unusual interest. A social hour will be enjoyed after the programme, during which refreshments will be offered.

EVANGELIST'S LAST MEETING—Evangelist B. Carradine will conclude his evangelistic meetings which he has been conducting in this city for the last 18 days by holding a meeting at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. today in the hall of the Volunteers of America, at Second and Washington streets. Carradine will leave Friday morning for Albany, where he will commence meetings the same afternoon and evening.

WOMAN WONDER-WORKER

ANNA EVA FAY TELLS HOW SHE USES HER POWERS.

Fragile Bit of Humanity Who Peers Into People's Souls and Reads Their Inmost Secrets.

Anna Eva Fay! A whole lot of name, this, for the fragile bit of humanity which answers it! Just 50 pounds she tips the scales—this remarkable little woman who has the power to separate her spirit from the astral body and send it into space—to many scenes, on many missions, some of love, some of charity, of life and death! Her physical strength seems to have been sacrificed for the mental, which is matured far beyond the ordinary, and her remarkably active mind seems never at rest. She took my hand in both hers and looked long and searchingly into my eyes—I immediately tried to remember or decide what was the worst thing I ever did in my life, with the vague idea that I would hide it from her, else she would know it. But she put me at ease and did not do any mind-reading "stunts."

"No, my dear, I do not do any individual work," she replied to my question. "I allow an audience to stir up waves of thought or disturb the elements, and myself in a condition to receive them. I constitute a signal station, one might say!" And Miss Fay briefly explained her powers and how she used them. Numerous experiences were related, which fairly took one's breath away. Nursery days when old "Mammy" told the big bear story to make the children go to sleep, and instead scared us all into living states of goodness, came back on some of those same waves of thought. The arrest of a noted criminal in Chattanooga, Tenn., by this little woman, when the police had been hunting for him in vain, seemed almost incredible. For she is empowered by the officials to make arrests and has exercised the power more than this once. The bad man had better keep away from her. Another experience which this mystic character related was of having a handsome lognette stolen on a crowded boat. She particularly valued it, as a beautiful diamond, which had been presented her by a Russian Princess, was set in it, so she determined to catch the thief. She managed to be first to cross the gang-plank, when the landing was made, and, summoning all her psychic powers, she looked into the faces of every passenger. Finally the one appeared—a woman, it was—and grabbing her by the arm Miss Fay demanded the lognette. After a second's parley it was handed over. Bad women had better keep away from her, it seems!

"My travels are peculiarly pleasant, for I meet such charming people. Only the intelligent, hunt me out—the others are not interested in me at all. My companion is 'Pearl'—and an aristocratic little Chihuahua dog looked up at the mention of her name with intelligence that seemed almost human. 'President Diaz' gave her to me when I was visiting Mexico, and though she weighs three and one-half pounds I would not sell her for her weight in gold." At which high valuation Pearl jumped into her mistress' lap and tried to express appreciation of this fact.

Before leaving I told Miss Fay my troubles—a ring stolen six or eight years ago, a family heirloom which I particularly wish to recover, and so on. "I will find that ring for you, my dear," And I believe she will.

MARY MANNERING COMING.

Advance Sale Opens at Marquam This Morning at 10 o'Clock.

This morning at 10 o'clock the advance sale of seats will begin for the charming actress, Mary Manning, who comes to the Marquam Grand Theater next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights, April 25, 26, 27, with a special price matinee Wednesday, in the new musical comedy, "Harriet's Honeycomb." Miss Manning is supported by Arthur Byron and a most excellent company.

Sale of "The Amerc" Tickets.

The sale of advance tickets for "The Amerc" has been very rapid, and there is no doubt that crowded houses will be the rule at all performances. The public realizes that the only way to be sure of seats is to secure these advance tickets and exchange them at the box office on Tuesday next, one day before the cash sale opens. These advance tickets guarantee the holders good seats, because the Marquam has been carefully counted and the exact number of tickets printed to correspond to the seats in the house. Securing these tickets does away with standing in line for hours, only to find that the seats have all been sold. The tickets are of four colors: Red for the first night, white for the second, blue for the third, and brown for the matinee. They are on sale at E. B. Rich's cigar store, Schiller's cigar store, Oregon News Company, Nair's Pharmacy, Aldrich Pharmacy and the Multnomah Club.

"The Cowboy and the Lady."

The Oregonian did not say that the miraculous is the same as the supernatural or that belief in God and immortality is tantamount to a belief in the miraculous. It did say that belief in God and immortality are not demonstrated by science. The point we have desired to make in this connection is simply that natural religion of the Unitarian order is not interchangeable with Christianity, whose basis is in miraculous doctrines, such as the divinity of Jesus, the immaculate conception, the atonement and the resurrection.

at the basis of Christianity is the life or the teachings of Jesus is a doctrine repudiated by every orthodox pulpit in the land. When the atonement is rejected and Jesus is reduced to rank of a mere teacher of morals the distinctive character of the Christian religion will be at an end.

Arcade.

All tastes are pleased this week at the Arcade, and there's not a dull moment from start to finish. The new scenic, devil acts are better than medicine, and they are great laugh-producers. Keene and Keene's pictures drawn on the stage are great, and W. J. Mill's impersonations are alone worth the admission.

Rationalism is Not Christianity.

PORTLAND, April 19.—(To the Editor.)—Your implied argument in the note following my letter is that, because certain persons employ the term "transcendent experience" in describing the miraculous, everything which transcends experience is, therefore, of that character. This is a "non sequitur," since the term is not exhaustive nor always distinctive as a characterization, and, moreover, is often used loosely and vaguely. Certain eminent scientists believe in the "dynamic atom" or "point" of force. This idea, emphatically transcends experience, since a point having neither area nor volume, being potentially nothing, cannot be comprehended as holding or irradiating power. The conception is entirely super-sensible, un-picturable, metaphysical and even contradictory. Spencer postulates the unknowable, I. e., according to his definition of knowledge, that which cannot be related, related to under relations in experience. Schopenhauer assumed to demonstrate the existence of "the will to live," a purely super-sensible, metaphysical reality, outside experience. Can these be properly said to be postulated, and believed in, the miraculous?

The distinctive element in the miraculous, in the ecclesiastical and historical sense of the word, is not merely, or with strict accuracy, transcendence, I. e., lying beyond experience, which is common to all speculations and theories concerning ultimate realities whether of the scientist, philosopher or theologian, but the fact that it operates directly upon the course of mundane phenomena, the observed uniform stream of cause and effect, for the time being contravening and nullifying it, as e. g., the alleged divinity of the waters of the Red Sea, or the narrative of the loaves and fishes. In so far as "liberal orthodox" theologians explain the miraculous by reference to "higher laws" which transcend, etc.—a tendency specially illustrated in divinity schools in New England—they evince it, from an ecclesiastical point of view, and reduce (or elevate) it to the naturalistic plane.

Beliefs in God and immortality, unless held solely on the basis of revelation, are in no proper sense miraculous. The one inference from all the facts of the universe concerning the nature of the ultimate cause or source; the other, an inference from various facts concerning the essential nature of man.

Emerson, Parker, Pike and hosts of others strenuously denied the miraculous, except in the popular sense of "marvel," yet they believed in God and immortality.
