What the American Mining Congress Is

OFFICERS OF AMERICAN MINING CONGRESS

J. B. Wright, of Portland, Third Vice President.

The American Mining Congress is a national organization of miners and mining engineers.

DEPARTMENTS OF MINING

There are several departments within the American Mining Congress, each focusing on different aspects of the mining industry.

1. Agricultural Department
   - The Agricultural Department focuses on the economic and social impact of mining on the agricultural sector. It aims to ensure that mining activities do not negatively affect rural communities and their agricultural practices.

2. Socialism and Labor Department
   - The Socialism and Labor Department deals with issues related to labor rights, working conditions, and the influence of socialism on the mining industry. It promotes fair labor practices and advocates for workers' rights.

3. Political Department
   - The Political Department engages with political processes affecting mining interests. It lobbies for policies that support the mining sector and represents miners' interests in political discussions and decisions.

4. Chamber of Mines
   - The Chamber of Mines is an executive committee that oversees the operations of the American Mining Congress. It ensures that the organization's policies and initiatives align with the needs of its members.

5. Journal of the American Mining Congress
   - The official publication of the American Mining Congress, this journal disseminates information, research, and news relevant to the mining industry.

6. American Mining Congress, Washington, D.C.
   - The headquarters of the American Mining Congress is located in Washington, D.C. It serves as the center for organizing events, meetings, and administrative activities.

The American Mining Congress plays a significant role in advocating for the interests of miners and mining engineers, ensuring that their concerns are addressed in policy-making processes.