

SALMON HEADLINE

Better Movement in Spot Canned Goods.

EFFECT OF PACKERS' STRIKE

If Labor Trouble Continues, Consumption of Fish in the East Will Be Largely Increased—Outlook for Futures.

There is an improvement in the demand for salmon in the East, according to the latest advice received, but this is hardly due to the packers' strike, though a continuance of the labor trouble will doubtless cause an increased consumption of canned salmon.

"Whether the salmon trade will feel an increased movement as a result of the meat strike is a question depending much on circumstances," said a commission dealer. "Should the difficulty be of long duration, and prices to the retail trade reach a point that would prohibit the eating of meat by the poorer classes, canned salmon and other articles in the fish line would undoubtedly be called upon to some extent. Up to the present time the salmon strike has had no effect on the Chicago trade."

There is among holders on the Coast and in the East a strong undercurrent chiefly due to the prospects for the coming pack. All reports from Alaska bear out the statement that this year's pack promises to be lighter than that of last year. A leading packer says with reference to futures:

"We believe that an ordinary pack of Columbia River chinooks will be disposed of on the opening basis. No more than an ordinary pack is expected, and this is being cut down from year to year by the increased quantities packed in mild cured style, principally for European shipment. The market has been a large measure being affected by artificial propagation. It is, of course, more guesswork to figure on the quantity of sockeye salmon this season. The market has been here the last two years, and the last pack sold at $1.50 for talls and $1.70 for flats. We look for sockeye to sell at Columbia River, Alaska, prices, even with a pack of 250,000 cases, which is the maximum prepared for and expected. In 1901 there were over 1,000,000 cases of sockeye salmon packed on the American side, and with red Alaska selling at about 50 cents, the price of sockeye was very low. Take away the effect of the 50-cent price on Alaska salmon and bring it up to the present level, and the situation of the effect of a short pack for two years of sockeye, and one is able to account for the present high price on the Puget Sound."

"We look for a very light pack of Alaska pink salmon. There is practically no pink salmon on the Coast available. No more than a 70 to 75-cent pack throughout the year on talls. There is a liberal supply of red Alaska salmon in packers' hands on the Coast. On account of making a pack of 250,000 cases, the $1.50 price, outside packers sold a great many thousand cases at from $1.20 to $1.25. Unless some foreign element enters the situation, for instance, a sustained demand from the Orient, we think the market will be easy and conservative buying will be the order. At the same time prices will be higher than the higher than at present should either of the warning notes come into the market again."

PORTLAND MARKETS
