

SHOOTS INTO CROWD

A Swedish Sailor Suddenly Runs Amuck.

CONTRACTOR IS WOUNDED

Edwin J. Hogwell, Who Arrived From Europe, Last Autumn, Suffers From Heat, Rheumatism and Too Much Prosperity.

Crazed by the ravages of rheumatism and by the heat, Edwin J. Hogwell, a Swedish sailor and a cripple, ran amuck near the Hotel Sverdrup, on Sixteenth street between Thurman and Savier streets, at 9:30 o'clock last night, and emptied the contents of two revolvers into a crowd of men standing in the office of the hotel. S. Westport, a well-known cement contractor, was struck by a bullet just over the right eye, but the wound is not serious. Hogwell was arrested by Deputy City Engineer W. P. Lillis, who happened to be in the neighborhood.

Hogwell arrived in Portland last Autumn on a German ship, having shipped from a Swedish port. He was too ill to do his work, and soon after the ship's arrival at this port he was sent to a local hospital. He remained in the hospital four months, being discharged about two months ago. Soon after he got out of the institution he suffered a severe attack of rheumatism, with which he is still afflicted.

For the last month Hogwell has conducted negotiations with the company owning the ship in which he sailed from Sweden toward getting transportation to the old country. The company compromised on a ticket to Marion, Ill., where a brother of Hogwell resides, and who recently wrote to Hogwell asking him to come there and remain until he was able to go to work. Yesterday morning Hogwell left the Hotel Sverdrup to go on a train to Sweden. The company was better to him than he thought they would be, for besides getting the ticket to the Illinois town, he obtained a steamship order, good for passage from New York to Sweden any time within a year. This fact led Hogwell to celebrate with the little money he had on his person. Whether drinks were drunk for him or not is a matter of conjecture, but when Hogwell returned to the Hotel Sverdrup at an early hour in the evening, he acted in a peculiar manner and did not answer those who spoke to him as he entered the hotel.

Shortly after 9 o'clock Hogwell hobbled down the stairs into the hotel office on his crutches. One of the boarders spoke to him as he entered the office, but Hogwell only glared at him and walked to the other end of the room.

"What's the matter with that fellow to-night?" remarked one of the men in the office. At that moment those in the vicinity were startled by two shots fired in quick succession. As they sprang to their feet they saw that Hogwell held a smoking revolver in his hand. On the sidewalk just outside the door stood Westport, Ben Carlson and F. A. Johnson. As they heard the shots they turned to see what was going on. At that moment there came a third shot, and Westport whirled on his heel and screamed: "I'm shot! I'm shot!" The other two bullets struck the wall of the hotel a few feet away from the three men.

After firing the third shot Hogwell dashed through the door, threw the revolver into an adjoining yard and flashed another. From two more shots into the crowd of men that ran toward the hotel. Then Hogwell hurried down the street.

Deputy Engineer Lillis was walking down Sixteenth street and heard the shots. He ran in the direction from which the sound of the shots came and soon came upon Hogwell with the revolver in his hand. He pointed the man at the same time reaching for the gun, which Hogwell threw into a yard. It was afterwards recovered. It was a .38-caliber pin fire revolver.

"They shot at me; they shot at me," cried Hogwell when Lillis grappled with him. Lillis saw at a glance that something was wrong with the man and grew cautious. With the aid of a bystander Lillis took Hogwell to a patrol box in the vicinity and called the patrol wagon. The wagon stopped at the hotel and picked up Westport, Carlson and Johnson.

The bullet entered Westport's head directly over the right eye, turned and lodged immediately before the right ear. Though painful, the wound was not serious as it might have been had the bullet struck a ball-fence or to the right. As soon as the Police Station was reached a physician was called and the ball removed from Westport's head. After the wound was dressed, Westport went to his home at 347 North Sixteenth street.

"The first thing I knew of the trouble was when I heard the first two shots fired," said Westport at the station last night. "I was talking to Carlson and Johnson, and when we heard the shots we turned to see what was going on. Just as we did so the third shot came, and I felt it strike my head. I guess I cried out something and sat down in a hurry. I was dazed for a moment, but was all right in a short time."

"We have never had any trouble of any sort with Hogwell," said Carlson, "and only knew him from meeting him at the hotel, where all of us board. He had told us yesterday of being successful in getting transportation, and we knew that he went up town to get the ticket. We noticed that he acted queer when he returned, and I guess the heat was too much for him."

At the Police Station Hogwell gave further evidence of being out of his mind. He refused to answer questions put to him by Captain Moore, but finally stated his name, after which he threw his crutches on the floor, leaned against the railing and gave way to a torrent of tears. He seemed to realize that he was in some trouble, and he protested strongly when the officer searching him took away his ticket. He could speak English well for one the country so near a time. He stands well with the Swedish people in the community, the Swedish Baptist Church even going so far as to guarantee his board bill at the Sverdrup. He is a large and powerful man, apparently about 40 years of age. Westport, the man who was shot, is well known among contractors and builders. He has been in the cement contracting business for some time and is now 33 years of age.

OFFICERS ON THE CARPET.

Two Policemen Face Charges Before Chief Hunt.

Two members of the Police Department are in trouble. Officer Connors is charged with having extorted money from a Frenchman and Special Officer Henninger is accused of having threatened to administer a thrashing to J. H. Richardson, a bicycle repairman. Charges were made against the two men yesterday morning and they have been summoned to appear before Chief Hunt and give an account of themselves.

More serious of the two is the case against Connors. According to the story told by Chief Hunt's informant, whose identity could not be learned yesterday, Officer Connors accepted a cash offering from a Frenchman. The officer is said to have informed the native of France that the money would be used for campaign purposes and would be to the interest of individuals whose occupation is a trifle on the shady order. It is also charged that the policeman swore the man to absolute secrecy, but if the charges are true the fellow appears to have broken faith. Officer Connors was on the carpet for a time yesterday afternoon, but the examination was not completed and there will be another carpet session today. Henninger is said to have had his trouble over a bicycle belonging to his son. Richardson, the bike repairer, claims he fixed a bicycle belonging to the special officer's son and after making an insistent demand for his services was called up by Officer Henninger and informed that if Henninger, junior, was molested any more the result would be a broken neck in the Richardson family. Officer Henninger has also been cited to appear today before Chief Hunt to give his version of the affair.

NEW ROOM AT WORK.

Sheriff Word Shows Many Chinamen Who He Is.

The County Jail reminded the casual visitor more of the historic little gathering at the Hotel Sverdrup than it did of the modern parlors of enforced leisure provided by the great County of Multnomah. It was filled with all kinds of people from all kinds of families, who had been gathered from all of the optimum dens of the city.

In plain fact, and much to the sorrow of many, Sheriff Tom Word had an official visit to the pipe-hitting booths and gathered in 22 Chinamen and six whites as the fruit of his efforts.

The small of opium has smitten the nostrils of the new Sheriff for some time, and he has been waiting to call out his smoke extinguishers for several days. Last night he did plan to take a nice baggy ride with his family, but the smoke of the pipe troubled him and he wanted the pipes to be brought before him, empty and dead. Each man vowed he knew where men hit the pipe, and with one accord G. W. Gruesel, G. P. Morden, John Cordano, J. S. Downey, W. B. Hollingsworth, "Dodge" Parrott, W. W. McIntosh, Harold Moreland and W. H. Mercer took the oath to seek the trail.

Sheriff Word and a couple of his men went to a place they knew on Fourth street, near Ankeny, which they quietly entered. The whole gang of men of the city were in this place, stretched out on the tables among the Chinamen, while above and around them were the fumes of the pipe. The whole gang was rounded up and brought to the jail, where they were searched and put into the corridor for safekeeping.

By this time the other men began to come in, leading long lines of shackled Chinamen. Some of the imported sprouts of the Celestial Kingdom were excited, some were afraid and many were mad. All were talkative, and expressed penitence to the Sheriff while they swore at him in Chinese.

Young Lee was tearful. He explained to the deputies while he waved his manacled hands that he was working on the Potter and had just stopped a minute while on his way to the bank. He was a good Chinaman and never smoked. He would lose his job if he were not allowed to go to the ship. When he was locked up he cried, and swore in broken English at the hardhearted officers of the law.

Young Lee was an aristocrat. He was in the bunch but was above it and evidently had had some experience. He objected to the searching process, and swore in three languages while it was going on. When he was locked in his cell he asked for a rocking chair, stating that the officers had walked him and too fast and that he was tired. The white men took their arrest calmly, and none of them seemed to mind being locked up.

While the men were being searched several Chinese merchants called at the jail to bail out some of their countrymen. Sheriff Word had placed the bail at $30, which was more than enough for all of the men released in jail for the night.

Several complete dream sets were taken by the raiders, and will be used as evidence in the cases against the men when they are brought up for trial. "I consider it my duty, as the Sheriff of Multnomah County, to see that the law is enforced," said Sheriff Word. "If the people will back me I will go after the dena as fast as one of them opens."

"I have the evidence here to convict every one of these fellows," said the Sheriff, "and if it is not done there will be trouble for some one. I am out after the pipe-hitters, and I mean to put an end to the dena."

BODY OF MRS. ELLIS FOUND.

Remains Are Interred in Lone Fir Cemetery—No Trace of Huntley.

The body of Mrs. Eva Ellis, who escaped from the Portland Sanitarium two months ago, has been discovered in the Williams near Jones' mill. The ghastly find was made by B. B. Rana, one of the employees of the mill, who discovered the body as he was measuring logs. The body was so decomposed that it was immediately taken to Lone Fir Cemetery and interred. The remains were identified by the clothing and a ring.

On the morning following the disappearance of Mrs. Ellis, her hat and some of her clothes were found on the river bank just below the cemetery. Her purse was also found, and it is a note to her husband concerning some money she had left in the bank. It was evident at the time that she contemplated suicide. Mr. Ellis has not been notified of the recovery of his wife's body, as he has moved his residence since her disappearance and cannot be found.

Of Herbert B. Huntley, the Seattle lawyer who disappeared from the Mount Tabor Sanitarium three weeks ago, no trace has been found, though search for the man continues. It is feared that he, also, has made away with his life, and popular opinion among the searchers is that his body will some day be found in Columbia Slough. A reward of $100 has been offered for the recovery of the body.
