RAILROAD WILL AID COUNCIL

Fighting the Injunction Suit Brought by Oregon City Taxpayers.

OREGON CITY, Or., Nov. 3.—(Special).—In fighting the injunction suit that has been brought by interested citizens to prevent the passage of an ordinance granting to the railroad company a perpetual franchise to Railroad avenue in this city, the Council will have the cooperation of the railroad company. Mr. Lutz, representing the railroad company, attended the meeting of the Council last night and advised the members of that body of the desire of the corporation to be represented by its legal department in fighting the injunction proceedings with the understanding that if successful in dissolving the injunction, then, in event of the passage of the ordinance granting the franchise, the railroad company will file its acceptance.

The offer was accepted by the Council, which instructed the City Attorney to cooperate with the railroad company's representatives in conducting the city's defense. The Council also made an order directing the payment of all costs incident to the court fees on behalf of the city's defense.

Previous to this action, an ordinance was introduced appropriating $12,500 from the first money received in the general fund for the immediate completion of the South End Road. Without a single exception the members of the Council appear to favor this improvement which has been so generally petitioned for by the people of Oregon City. This action will probably permanently dispose of this bone of contention which has been a disturbing factor in municipal affairs in this county for years.

A communication from the members of the citizens' committee requesting a conference between the City Engineer and an expert in road construction, was promptly tabled on motion of Straigt.

ASK REPEAL OF EDDY LAW.

Movement on Foot Amongst Mining Men of Eastern Oregon.

BAKER CITY, Or., Nov. 3.—(Special).—There is a movement among the mining men of this section of the state to bring about the repeal of the Eddy corporation law. A petition is being circulated asking the Legislature to repeal the law. If it is not possible to secure the repeal of the law then it is hoped the Legislature will amend the present law so as to reduce the fee charged mining corporations. The mining men also object to the annual tax to the state, which ranges from $125 to $300. It is pointed out that often a mining company is obliged to incorporate a heavy lump sum and await the sale of stock before the work of development can be pushed. Mining men say that it not infrequently happens that a mine is incorporated and several years elapse before it becomes a producing mine, yet under the present law the corporation is obliged to pay an annual tax to the state which in some instances becomes a heavy burden, especially to the poor prospector. The petitioners argue that an exception should be made in favor of mining corporations for the reason that they are necessary to incorporate undeveloped claims in order to raise money to exploit them. A strong lobby will doubtless be sent from the mining industry to work for the repeal or amending of the present law.

Lane County Gives Fair Money.

EGGENA, Or., Nov. 3.—(Special).—The matter of an exhibit of Lane County products at the Lewis and Clark Exposition was finally decided after a hearing by the County Court making an appropriation of $500 to be expended in preparing a suitable display. This action was taken after arguments by a committee from the Eugene Commercial Club, who appealed strongly for a proper display from the county in order to show the public its resources.

It is the intention to make an exhibit that will surpass any. This in addition to the mining exhibit from the Blue River mines, now being prepared, will certainly make Lane County's display attractive.

KEPT SWEET THREE YEARS

SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENT WITH JUICE OF PRUNES.

Demonstration at Oregon Agricultural College Opens Way for Use of Waste Orchard Product.

COORVALLIS, Or., Nov. 3.—(Special).—Prune juice kept in bottles in the bacteriological department at the Oregon Agricultural College is exactly the same now as the day it was put up. Bottles of it recently opened were found to have retained their freshness and sweetness as when it was squeezed from the prunes and put away, more than three years ago, by Professor Perrot. A low-temperature process of sterilization was used, and the experiment makes it certain that there is a wide field for a profitable industry in Oregon in preserving sweet cider. Professor Perrot, bacteriologist at the college, says:

Thousands of bushels of apples which are for one reason or another, unmarketable, this fruit is left to decompose on the ground and become a menace to health, an injury to the soil, and a promoter of fungoid growth and insect pests. Sweet cider is a wholesome, nutritious beverage, which should be made from all home-grown apples, and also be a source of income to the horticulturist.

State laws prohibit the use of any preservative to prevent fermentation, which means any adopted which are equally effective in preserving cider in its natural condition. The organisms which produce fermentation in a liquid as molasses, or other matter are readily destroyed at a low temperature, which may be accomplished by the use of a refrigerator. When the liquid is sterilized and kept from the air, it will remain in its natural condition for an indefinite length of time.

The following method of preserving fruit juice in bottles has proven very satisfactory in an experimental way. As cider comes from the press, it is filtered at least three times of older. If this were done in the same way and the cider and after cooling in the steam chest, the bottles are dipped in hot canning wax, which finishes the sealing. Fruit juice treated in this way does not acquire a cooked taste, and being sterile, it remains unchanged.

In order to obtain a correct reading of the temperature, a thermometer is passed through the top of the steam chest and reaches to the center of a bottle which is filled with the liquid being sterilized. The steam chest may consist of an iron rest, or be constructed of wood.

Prune juice has been kept in the laboratory for three years in perfect condition. Cider and other fruit juices may be preserved in the same way and to great advantage in the preparation of many delicacies for the table, as well as being used as a beverage.

If more good, wholesome fruit juices were used to supply the demands of the system, less drugs and medicines would be required to maintain the healthfulness, especially in this mild climate.

Cider apples can generally be obtained for 10 cents per bushel. One bushel will make at least three gallons of cider. If this were sold for 25 cents per quart bottle, the cider from one bushel of apples would give a gross receipt of $2.50, and the cost of preparing 15 bottles of cider for market would not exceed 75 cents at a cost.

There is a constant demand for sweet cider, and an extensive market for it. The product is a valuable and healthful beverage.
