Foreign Exhibit Building Completed.

NOW READY FOR DISPLAYS

Structure Is Beautiful and Durable.

WORK WAS BEGUN IN MAY

Contractors Will Formally Turn the Building Over to Lewis and Clark State Commission Saturday-Others Near Completion.

An Important step toward the early completion of the Lewis and Clark Exposition was made yesterday, when the first of the great exhibit palaces was finished. The magnificent Foreign Exhibits building is the one to be first ready for use. A small force of workmen put the finishing touches on the interior during the morning, and at noon the huge doors were put under lock until such time as exhibits begin to arrive from St. Louis for Winter storage.

Within the next few days the building Within the next few days the building will be formally turned over to the Lewis and Clark State Commission by the Burgell Construction Company, which erected it. This ceremony will probably occur at the meeting of the commission which occurs Saturday. The building has already been tested by Superintendent of Construction Brixon and found to measure up to the required standards.

Imposing and Durable.

The Foreign Exhibits building is one of the most imposing and at the same time most durable buildings of the Exposition. Its architecture is of the Spanish renascence style, and is an artistic conception. The many windows and big entrances are finely desprated with staff designs in figures, ornaments and medaillons. The west entrance, in particular, is a work of art and is said by connoisseurs to surpass the entrance of any of the beautiful St.

The roof is an arched dome with a broad space on the extreme top given to heavy skylights. The best material is used for the skylights and is tinted to give a pleasing atmospheric effect to the interior. The interior is fitted up as one spacious pavilion, with a broad gallery spread half way to the dome. There are six wide flights of stairs connecting the main floor with the gallery. Huge beams and bolts and steel rods add an air of durability. The interior walls are painted a light

Ample Fire Protection.

Ample Fire Protection.

For fire protection reels of hose are placed at different parts of the main floor and gallery. These are connected with the water mains at all times, and half a dozen streams of water could be brought into service if needed, by simply manning the mozeles and turning-open the water valves.

The amnouncement that the Foreign Exhibits building had been finished aroused the interest of all workmen on the grounds yesterday, as well as the many visitors. No announcement had been made that the work was to be finished yesterday, and when the news spread about the grounds it caused something of a sensation.

Work on the building was commenced early in May, when the Burrell Construction Company got a contract to erect it.

It was originall intended to serve as a festival hall, but the plans were afterward altered, as it was found necessary to devote it to the use of for-eign exhibitors and provide another and smaller amusement hall.

No Smoking at Fair Grounds. The strictest rules are enforced against smoking about the Lewis and Clark grounds. Signs appear promiscuously, and the force of guards and watchmen have instructions to see to it that there are no instructions to see to it that here are no violations of the rule. Among the unfinished buildings fire would be quite as dangerous as it would be in a powder magazine, although when the buildings are finished the danger will be removed, and it ished the danger will be removed, and it is probable the restrictions will be, too. The danger was recently brought to the attention of the Exposition authorities in a forcible manner when one found a lighted cigar lying in a support beam in the Agricultural Palsoc. Prompt discovery probably saved a fire, and since then precautions have been redoubled, and a man with a lighted cigar is looked upon as for a prompt calling down.

Rose Gardens Burst in Bloom.

The rose gardens recently installed about different portions of the Lewis and Clark Exposition grounds are beginning to bloom and add greatly to the beauty of the scene. There are several hundred rose bushes in bloom, and their growth is so gauged by expert gardeners that they should be in their prime when the Expo-
