Life Work of One Man Donated to Portland.

MEMORY WILL BE CHERISHED

The Late Benjamin Roop, by Presenting the City With His Ornithological Collection, Formed Nucleus of Free Museum.

In the recent death of Benjamin Roop, which occurred at the home of his daughter. Mrs. Frank Drake, Oregon lost a valued citizen and one who has left behind him something of educational benefit to the public at large and which will cause his memory to be fresh for many years when others have been forgotten.

Mr. Roop donated his life work to the city of Portland when he placed his fine collection of birds and animals in the City Museum, forming the nucleus of City Museum, forming the nucleus of what has become a splendld ornithological collection. He spent many years in gathering his many choice specimens from the four corners of the earth, and after its completion he declared that the thousands completion he declared that the thousands of dollars which he had put into it had been fully repaid by the pleasure derived from his work, and without compensation presented the city with his collection.

Colonel L. L. Hawkins was largely instrumental in obtaining the donation from Mr. Roop and went to great expense in having the rare specimens properly.

having the rare specimens properly mounted and placed on exhibition in the

His Early Life.

Mr. Roop came to Clackamas County when a boy and spent many years of his life in that locality. Those who knew him at that time have many interesting remi-niscences to relate concerning his natur-al tendency toward all branches of natural science. At one time he was deeply interested in astronomy and used to jecture on that subject to his townsmen. Birds, animals and fishes had a deep attraction for him and he studied them closely. On leaving Clackamas County he went to San Francisco and took charge of the Woodward Gardens at that place, which position he retained for 26 years. It was during this incumbency that he began his collection of birds, which was soon complete with all the specimens of the United States and Canada. He then turned his attention to the feathered population of other countries of the world and during the years spent in San Fran-cisco the fever of collection never ceased to burn in his veins. The opportunities in the Zoological gardens to come in contact with people from all countries was great, and in addition to obtaining many specimens in this manner Mr. Roop sent a man first to Africa and later to South America, where many rare varieties were ants from India, tiger pheasants from Macedonia, birds of Paradise from Australia, lyre oirds and a wild fighting rooster from the Vica Islands in the Baltic Sea (a species pow extinct) are among some of the unusual specimens he

One specimen of the duck-billed plati-pus cost Mr. Roop $300, and a number of others range as high as $100 each. He had 42 varieties of parrots and 12 different kinds of birds of Paradise.

History of the Grizzly.

Perhaps the many people who visit the City Museum daily do not know the his-tory of the great grizzly bear which stands in the basement always reaching for the coon in the tree above him, but it is one which a Spanish builtighter might be proud of. "Pempoy," as the bear was named, belonged to Mr. Roop from was named, belonged to Mr. Roop from the time he was a harmless, playful little cub, and was raised in San Francisco in the Woodward Gardens. Once he was sold, and before Mr. Roop got possession of him again he had been converted into a professional builfighter, and in 21 hat-ties in which he was matched with in-furiated bulls he came out victorious, killing his opponent in every case. He dled at the age of 29 from the effects of this fighting. His skin was immediately mounted, and, eventually he found his way into the City Museum of Portland where he is the delight and awe of every whild in town. The large Bengal tiger which also stands in the basement of the Museum, was another of Mr. Roop's lifechild in town. ong pets, he having owned him from a kitten until his death. while the museum has been enlarged by nany additional collections and speci-ners, Colonel Hawkins says that fully one-fourth of the rare birds now exhibited there belong to the Roop collection. The many classes of school children which are brought to the museum weekly testify to the great educational value to a munity such a donation has proven. This beneficial culmination of such a work as Mr. Roop's and the noble and generous spirit which prompted him to give the public full measure of it, can ing generation as it has with the past, in honor and respect.
