OLD PORTLANDER HEARD FROM.—A gen-tieman who has just returned from a visit tieman who has just returned from a visit to New South Wales reports having met there an old-time citizen of Portland who was well-known here some & years ago, in the person of Captain A. S. Murray, He was engaged in the steamboat busi-ness here and remembered and inquired after many of those connected with that efter many of those connected with that business here in those days. Among those he mentioned were Captain J. C. Ainsworth, S. G. Reed and others who are gone. During his long residence in New Bouth Wales he has been engaged in steamboating and is still a hale, hearty man, full of life and vigor, and is now running a steamboat on the Hawkbury River. He sent cards to a number of old-time citizens and desired to be particularly remembered to Theodore Wygant, Purser D. O'Neil, H. C. Leonard, H. W-Scott and many others, and to let them know that he intends to visit Portland and know that he intends to visit Portland and nd the Lewis and Clark Fair next

MOTORMAN PREVENTS SERIOUS ACCI DENT.—A motorman in charge of the spe-cial transfer car on the Burnside bridge yesterday prevented a serious accident by stopping his car in remarkably short time on the Graw. A stranger on horseback on the draw. A stranger on norsecace and dressed as a cowboy was riding across the bridge at about 12 o'clock, when his horse sprang to one side and fell, throwing his rider directly across the track in front of the heavy car, which was moving rapidly. The motorman reversed the power and applied the brake just as the car reached the prostrated man, and he was pulled out from the front end un-injured. The car was brought to a stop in about six feet. A passenger standing n the steps succeeded in grasping the ridle reins of the horse and the animal ras turned over to the rider.

AT THE THEATERS

.. Marion Ashworth Mr. Burgess Frederick Spencer Candida......Alice Treat Hunt Eugene Marchbanks...Loster Lonergan

Following George Bernard Shaw in his deep visitation into human nature it was indeed gratifying to look about and observe that there was a good house to see the opening presentation of "Candida" at the Marquam Grand, last evening. It was an appreciative audience, which absorbed the subtler shades of feeling, and the deeper meanings of the play, as well as the broad effects, which have combined to make "Candida" a popular production. In "Candida" the noted English writer. Mr. Shaw, has given a powerful creation to literature, and, in turn, to drama, and in Lester Lonergan and his supporters is a company admirably qualified to interpret Mr. Shaw's meanings. In the difficult role of Eugene Marchbanks, the poetic genius, Mr. Lonergan rises to the needs of the part, giving an interpretation that stampe him as an actor of ability and of hyeard understanding of human of needs of the part, giving an interpretation that stampe him as an actor of ability, and of broad understanding of human nature. It is safe to say there are few men who could appreciate this part and transmit his appreciation to an audience as does Mr. Lonergan.

The play is billed as a modern comedy.
Mr. Shaw himself characterizes it a satirical comedy, but it is best described, perhaps, as a domestic comedy-drama. The plot centers about two widely diverging types of men, extremes, in fact, and the wife of one of these. Rev. James Mayor Morell is a man of strictly material composition. His world is the material world, and his thoughts run in set channels—of orthodox approval, although, by nels-of orthodox approval, although, by the way, he is enthusiastically prompting certain social reforms. He is a man upon whom misfortune has never frowned severely-a man who, having never felt, is of a deeper understanding of things and men.

He picks up Eugene, the youthful prod-igal son of an English peer, and whose absolute lack of material ideas have placed him in rather a had way in a sordid world. This poetic soul, who has been denied love and sympathy, and has suffered the tortures of being misunderstood, finds in the clergyman's wife a re-sponsiveness to his own nature. He finds himself in love with her, and his nature rebels at the material atmosphere in which her soul is forced to carry on a smothered existence. He declaims against this to the minister. He tells him his so-called reform services are only as much this to the minister. He tells him his so-called reform sermons are only so much wind, that it produces no good, and that only the force of his personality and his tricks of oratory keep his hearers from going to sleep. In a rage, the clergyman seizes the youth by the throat and chokes him. Exigene shrinks from the touch and cows like a contemptible coward—but as it develops later. It is not fear, but his develops later, it is not fear, but his hatred of the man that causes him to shrink. He begs Morell to tell Candida all that has happened, which he refuses

The powerful climax follows in the third The powerful citmax follows in the third act when Rev. Dr. Morell, who has noted his wife's marked liking for Eugene has left them alone for the evening, saying he has no fear. Eugene reads poetry until her weariness of it stops him. He is encouraged then to speak what he feels. The entrance of Rev. Dr. Morell, returning late from his lecture, does not attract their attention until he is before returning atts from its lecture, does not attract their attention until he is before them and sees that which arouses his jealous suspicion. In rage he demands of Eugene, when Candida leaves the room to know what has happened. The situation then develops in intensity until it is demanded of Candida by the husband that she choose between them. This she does, taking the weaker man and the man who needs her most. Rev. Dr. Morell. The climax is finely developed by the author and strongly executed by the artists.

In the part of Candida Alice Treat Hunt does good work, having an admirable conception of the requirements. It would seem, however, that she exhibits a trifle too much compiscency at times to harmonize perfectly with the character of Candida. Richard Lambert, as the curate, is laughable and clever and adds much to attract their attention until he is before is inughable and clever and adds much to the play, although his part is a minor one. Prosperine, Rev. Dr. Morell's sten-ographer, who is in love with him, makes an excellent typewritist, although she could improve it some by learning to properly operate a typewriting machine. Frederic Spencer, as the rascally father of

The play will be presented again this evening, with the closing performance Wednesday evening.

WELCOME GRAND OPERA.

York Displays an Enthusiasm Almost Unparalleled.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21 .- Society bailed NEW YORK, Nov. II.—Society balled the opening of the season of grand opera-under the management of Heinrich Con-reid at the Metropolitan Opera-House to-night with an outpouring of enthusiasm almost unparalleled. Never in the memory of the oldest of operagoers was such a rush for admission witnessed. Before the overture was ended, there was not a ticket to be had, and it was only with the utmost difficulty that the fact could be impressed on the crowd, which was so impressed on the crowd, which was so dense as for a while to block entrance to Tickets in the hands of speculators

FIXES EXAMINATION DATES.

Tests in Public Schools Will Include Vertical Writing.

SALEM, Or., Nov. 21.—(Special.)— Superintendent of Public Instruction J.
H. Ackerman today fixed the dates for eighth-grade final examinations to be conducted in the public schools of Oregon in 1905. The dates are as follows:
January 18, 19, 20; April 12, 13, 14; May 17, 18, 19; June 7, 5, 9. The dates fall on Wednesdays. Thursdays and Fridays, and are placed at the time of the year which will accommodate the largest number of schools. The programme will be the same at each examination, the subjects being taken up on the several days as follows: Wednesday—Arithmetic, spelling, physiology; Thursday—Mental arithmetic, reading, writing, civil government; Friday—Language, history, geography. The statement of the sources of questions to be propounded is worthy of special attention from teachers and principals in public schools, for some have met with trouble in the past because they overlooked this point. Several teachers did not teach their pupils the vertical system of writing, because they preferred the "slant" system, and as a result the pupils failed to pass the examination, through no fault of their own. The circular of information specifies that the examination will be conducted in the vertical system.
