LEGEND OF FAMOUS TREE

CURIOUS BIT OF MEXICAN IN-DIAN LORE.

Origin of the Crocodile Species of Timber That Cannot Endure Sunshine or Cold.

Along the count lands of Mexico there is found a class of legends that differ guits materially from those of the inland regions, says Modern Mexico. They are of less exalted type than the legends that are supposed to have a Toltec origin, and they more nearly resemble the stories handed down by the Northern Indians. This is particularly true of the animal legends that are told in the hot country adjacent to the sea. A characteristic story of this class is about the crocodiles that frequent the rivers and bayous of the hot country. It will not require an ethnologist to see the human nature that woven into the fantastic legend of the interesting reptile. A particularly interesting point is the disclosure of the fact that the Darwinian theory of the origin of man prevailed at this time among the primitive story-tellers of the Tierra Callonte, or at least along the banks of the River of the Winding Snake. Long ago, before man lived upon the the banks of the Winding Snake were the homes of the crocodiles. They taught by their elders that all they had to taugat by their elders that all they had to do in life was to lie in the sun and warm themselves and sleep. The young croco-dlies sometimes wished to wander off in the thick wood, where they heard the monkeys chattering and the parrots mocking them, and the spotted cats fighting with each other. They wondered how wide the woods were, and where the paths away and climb over the great mountain and see the world. For, they reasoned, travel all over the land, so can we, and we will not cut off our talls, either. The meeting lasted from early morning until the sun stood still in the middle of the sky, and before they parted the young crocodiles promised to meet at sunrise the following morning, at the same place,

They could not travel on the land because the forest was so through the trees and vines, but somethey were obliged to climb along anks to get around a waterfall or over a fallen tree. When night came they were very tired, and crept out into some tall grass that grew in a marshy inlet of god and his sisters came upon weeks ago, and now he and pink chif-tey had told the old crocodlles the water god and his sisters came upon long ago that the young ones must never leave the hot country, and they had a great deal to, do besides looking after crocodiles. They summon the rains and the springs and the streams, and are very industrious people. For many years the crocodiles had obeyed the wishes of the water god, but knowing the habits of "My corner cuphoard!" ejaculated Mrs.

The spirits of the hills obeyed the water by not the the president of the Bamgod, and carried all but one of the little bridge Manufacturing Company?" proceediles into the dark forest, where the sun never penetrates, and stood them up like posts. There they stand today, with heads buried in the earth and their renewed to other crocodiles not to leave the lowlands. For these little wandering crocodiles have now all turned to trees and the people call them the Rabo de Lagarto (the crocodile's tail). They cannot live in the sun, and they are only and in the dense shade of the coffee and orange groves or the wild forest. They are as sensitive to the cold winds and ogs as they are to the sun, and suffer water god overlooked awoke in the morning and learned what had happened to his companions he ran as fast as he could to the banks of the Winding Snake, jumbed in and swam home. When he told the old crocodiles the fate of all their young ones they began to weep. For a young ones they began to weep. For a little odds and ends that make it difficult to keep a room tidy. If you would and learned what had happened to jumped in and swam none. When he take the old crocodiles the fate of all their young enes they began to weep. For a whole year they mourned and they shed so many tears that the mouth of the Winding Snake has ever since been salty. that time no crocodiles in all the world have ever climbed into the hijls,

The Moon's Craters.

Booklovers. If there be craters on the moon that are anything but extinct, they must expel something. Judged by the discharges of our earthly volcanoes, that something must be water and carbonic acid gas. Water cannot possibly exist as a liquid: for the temperature of the moon's surface during the long lunar night is probably far from 460 degrees below the zero mark of a Fahrenhelt thermometer. Ice and snow are the forms, then, which lunar water must assume. Is there any evidence of it? Hundreds of "crateriets"

full upon them. Capping the loftier peaks the same sliver glow may be seen. On the slopes of the greater mountain chains, on the ramparts of hugo craters the elivery sheen casts its halo, fading away strange-ly as the sun rises higher and higher, and reappearing at sunset just before the long, cold lunar night sets in. From many of the craters, notably from Tycho, long white rays spread out for hundreds of miles enigmas in the old moon of a generation ago, but in the new moon of today eration ago, but in the new moon of today deep crevices illuminated only when the sun is high in the lunar heavens. What is this silvery substance that caps the Apennines of the moon, gleams on the slopes, and radiates from the craters? According to the new school it is simply fee and snow, collecting at the poles, on summits, and in the very places where it ought to collect. Moreover, it parties exought to collect. Moreover, it partly ex-plains the curious changes that occur at different times of the lunar day in the size of the crater Linne, the "very small, round, brilliant spot," previously men-tioned; it explains the illumination of deep snow-bottomed plis and abysses that are inky black at sunrise and sunset, and brilliantly white when the sun shines directly into them: and it explains the fading away and reappearance of white stains at different periods in the lunar day. The melting and falling of snew, the disappearance and reappearance of hoar frost, alone can account for these changes. In old descriptions they are said to be due to variations in lilumination; in the philosophy of the new moon they are attributed with beautiful simplicity to the alternate evaporation and freezing of water expelled from craters in eruption.

Higher Grades at Forest Grove.

FOREST GROVE, Or., Dec. 18.-(Spe cial.)-At a special meeting of the taxpayers of the Forest Grove school dis trict Saturday, it was voted to add ninth and tenth grades to the public school, and a tax of 8 mills was levied for that purpose. The agitation for better pub-lic school facilities has been going on for some time and the vote to add the higher grades was almost unanimous. Two additional teachers will be emlined with a slivery coating that ployed and the new grades will begin me desslingly when the sun shines work about February 1.
