brief discussion followed, led by A. J. Bothwell, of Wyoming, who took strong exception to a statement made Cooper to the effect that the struggle for life in the business world longer existed. He characterized the talk of Mr. Cooper as "buncombe," and asserted that there were no men in the world who fought so determinedly for business as the commission whom Mr. Cooper represented.

Mr. Bell, of Laramie, Wyo., spoke strongly, urging the tattlemen to stand together against the railroads, which, he said, did not treat the cattlemen with sufficient consideration,

Frank Bruton, of Colorado, read a describing livestock conditions in the past as compared with those of the present. His remarks were filled with humorous hits at the cattle business and kept the convention in continuous Bughter.
