Some stores place self-interest and a miserly greed of gold above the finer instincts of humanity and a feeling for their fellow man who has to work or starve. And such stores regard themselves sometimes—in print—in a class with the "trains and telegraph." The public places them, however, in their proper class, as mere phantoms of a "one-hoss shay" and a Chinese junk—relics of the past and a charnel-house of decayed ideas. "Shall we go to see the relics of this town?"—Shakespeare. If so, go to the stores that keep open after 6 P. M. This store is in the modern class, that closes when the day is done—at 6 P. M.
