

FIGHT TO A DRAW

Twin Sullivan and Tommy Burns Box 20 Rounds.

GOING STRONG AT THE FINISH

Eighteen Hundred Spectators in the Tacoma Athletic Club See, Indecisive Struggle for Middle-weight Championship.

TACOMA, Wash., March 7.—(Staff Correspondence.)—Tommy Burns, of Chicago, and Jack ("Twin") Sullivan, of Boston, fought a 20-round draw here tonight.

The fight was for the middle-weight championship of the world, and if clean fighting and clever ring generalship would have counted when it came to handing down the decision, Tommy Burns would have been declared the winner.

Burns, however, was satisfied, so, in spite of noisy rooting of the fight fans present, the decision goes. The fact of the matter is, and those who saw the battle are now satisfied that the much-touted "Twin" Sullivan is little better than a great big piece of cheese.

At the ringside were fight fans from all over the State of Washington and a sprinkling of a hundred or more of Portland's ring followers. Behind Burns was Tommy Tracey, Portland's favorite, and Jack Hill, another favorite Portlander.

At the ringside were fight fans from all over the State of Washington and a sprinkling of a hundred or more of Portland's ring followers. Behind Burns was Tommy Tracey, Portland's favorite, and Jack Hill, another favorite Portlander.

Portlanders Root for Burns. These Portlanders were rooting for Burns, and when Sullivan repeatedly failed to observe the conditions of the fight, that of breaking clean at the order of the referee, they mingled their voices in loud protest with the rest of those present.

For 14 rounds the battle was a rather tame affair. Burns was always the aggressor and from the first to the last round brought the battle to the man from Boston. Sullivan entered the ring a hot 10-to-3 favorite, but before the battle was two rounds old the 180 people present were howling for Burns.

Sullivan may call cultured Boston his home, but he has not the reputation he has earned in his former ring engagements and far short of what might be termed a fair fighter. It was his constant infraction of the conditions of the fight that turned the tide of public sympathy against him.

Sullivan Uses a Swing. After a fashion—the haymaker fashion—Sullivan is shifty, but when it comes to the clean-cut exchange of wallops and footwork he was a shine compared with Burns. Sullivan was content with using a wild, wild haymaker swing, all but a few of which missed Burns. The only effective work of Sullivan during the entire 20 rounds was in the clinches, and this was prohibited.

On the other hand, Burns was jabbing his left into Sullivan's frontal piece. In the 15th round he changed the programme and crossed over a right. With this mighty poke Burns opened a gap over Sullivan's left eye that would have allowed the entire Japanese army to pass through, and in this same round he cut loose with his left and soon had Sullivan's big proboscis streaming with blood.

It was at these two marks, and an occasional shot amidrift, that caused Sullivan to not only slow up, but back up all through the fight. It was at these marks that Burns kept shooting at during the remaining four rounds, and these wallops would have won for him but for the request that he made to Referee Jimmy Carroll, after the fight had gone a couple of rounds.

Burns Would Claim a Fight. When Sullivan insisted upon hitting in clinches and the crowd began to bowl their heads off, Burns told Referee Carroll that he did not want to win the fight on a decision or a foul. It was for this reason that Referee Carroll gave the decision that he did. From this it is clear that Burns wants another fight with the much-touted "Twin" Sullivan, and those who saw the fight tonight will bet that Burns will win.

Three rattling preliminaries were thrown into the evening's entertainment, but the third one was the best of the lot. In this fight "Chicken" Hudson fought Harry Brown, of San Francisco. It was scheduled as a fight of 10 rounds. The boys had fought a draw before, and Hudson, a red-headed Irish lad, with as much fight in him as there is in a case of wildcats, wanted to get even. He did. This fight, from a singular standpoint, was better than the main bout.

Hudson was returned the winner via the knock-out route in the fifth round. He had almost to kill the 'Frisco lad before he got the decision. W. G. M.
