

IN SELF-DEFENSE

Jury Finds Charles Bock Not Guilty.

ECHO OF UNION TROUBLES

Defendant, a Sailor, Carried a Revolver to Protect Himself From Assault by Members of the Longshoremen's Union.

That a man has a right to earn his daily bread, whether his belongs to a daily or not, and that he has a right to defend himself when attacked, even by the use of a revolver, if necessary, is practically what a jury in the Municipal Court decided yesterday when Charles Bock was acquitted on a charge of carrying a concealed weapon.

Bock is a member of the Sailors' Union and was engaged in handling cargo of the T. P. Emigh, tied up at the docks of the Portland Lumber Company. Patrolman Porter arrested him and took from him a revolver. Porter thereafter appeared as a complaining witness, but behind the case stands the Longshoremen's Union, with which the Sailors' Union has been at odds over the Emigh's freight. It is claimed the longshoremen refuse to work on the vessel, and that they are right in not wanting the sailors to do so.

There was but the testimony of Patrolman Porter and Bock, but much time was consumed, as there were frequent fits between attorneys. Judge Hogue also took part occasionally, as at times he thought the attorneys were not conducting the case along strictly legal lines. Deputy District Attorney Steiner appeared for the state and Attorney Citron for the defense. Citron maintained throughout the trial that the jury must either, by its decision, give a man the right to carry a concealed weapon, or that he has a right to carry a revolver to protect his life, and that he carried it in a pocket inside his vest, which left the handle in sight. After arguments by counsel and instructions to the jury, it was but a few minutes when a verdict of acquittal was brought in.

Verdict Smith was then placed on trial, charged with carrying a concealed weapon, and with carrying a dangerous weapon. The defendant is a member of the Longshoremen's Union and the complainant of the Sailors' Union. The trouble took place over the Emigh's cargo, as in the previous case. Judge Hogue expressed himself as of the opinion that the defendant was guilty, but withheld sentence until tomorrow, when the remainder of the assault cases growing out of the trouble are to be called.

Late yesterday afternoon Bock was again arrested, this time by Patrolman Roberts, on a warrant charging him with assault and battery. Attorney Matson is the complainant. He says Bock struck him with a stone Monday night.
