Cattlemen Victims Combination.

COMBINE QUOTES PRICES

Growers Must Sell to Trust or Keep Their Beef.

ALL TERRITORY IS DIVIDED

Buyers Will Not Bid Against Each Other, and Cattlemen Are Driven to Corner, Where They Cannot Even Stand at Bay.

BY JOHNSTON MCKILLY Not only does the local beef trust hold up the retailer and through the small dealer the consumer, but it goes further, dealer the consumer, but it goes farther, attacks the grower, and forces cattlemen to come to its terms, buys beef on the hoof at its own price, grades the beef according to its own standard, and catches the lucre "comin' and goth."

Moreover, there is said to be an unboly alliance between the packers and whole-salers of Portland on the one side and the packers and wholesalers of Scattle and the Sound country on the other, an lillance that draws invisible lines throu the country of beef production, invisible lines that divide the territory and lay out claims with such fidelity that Sound packers and Portland packers never bid against each other in the field, thereby forcing the growar to deal with but one man, who offere prices such as a man will offer when he knows there is no pos-

Growers Once Rebelled.

Less than a year ago, when the packers deemed it eafe to lower the price of beef below the 4-cent margin, the growers in Oregon rebelled. The buyer who invaded the Portland territory was told in a few words that he could not get beef unless he paid a respectable price, unless he was willing to give growers enough money for their stock to make cattle-raising a lucrative industry. The growers, perhaps, had met before-hand and arranged to "get together." and they did so. The buyer for the Port-land district found that throughout his territory growers refused to sell at the prices he offered, and stated that they desired a certain price—a price that ap-peared uniform with all growers in the territory.

Buyer Deserts Territory.

The buyer hastened to a telegraph of fice when this was discovered and proved to his satisfaction, and wired the cir-cumstances to his house, or houses, in Portland. He did not receive an answer to pay the growers the reasonable price they asked, nor was he told that the best had to be purchased at any price because the packing-houses absolutely needed it. Instead, he was ordered back to headquarters forthwith. The follow-ing day beef was relised 2 cents a pound, and when consumers and retailers alike fice when this was discovered and proved and when consumers and retailers alike asked why, they were told that beef was scarce, and that anything scarce was necessarily higher than something that "scarcity of beef" cry of the packers and wholesslers held a small grain of truth, because it was evident to re-tailers who watched the yards for a few days at that time that there were no large shipments. But about the time the dealers ceased to hang around the yards the trust made another move.

Buys Beef in Colorado.

The buyer was hurried to Colorado, and there he visited the ranches for the purpose of purchasing beef on the hoof. He was forced to bid against the real beef trust in capital letters. He met buyers for Armour and for Swift, When these men learned that there was houstle buyers in the field they been hostile buyer in the field they began their usual series of tricks. The Port. land buyer played up to them-and he got

He got it at 2 cents a pound more than He got it at 2 cents a pound more than he would have had to pay the Oregon growers to satisfy them and give them a little profit. He shipped the cattle to Portland, and the local trust paid the freight. This made the beef fully 3% cents higher than Oregon beef would have cost when purchased at the price the growers demanded. But the trust didn't care, for it was playing a game,

Prices Raised Again. man in Colorado purchased as much beef as he would have purchased as much beef as he would have purchased had he confined his operations to the Oregon territory. Prices remained high, because, the packers said of the "scarcity of beef." Email dealers paid the prices and the wealthier class of consumers paid the advance in turn. The poor ate no beef.

When it came time for the buyer again to invade the Oregon field, the catlemen waited for him in vain. Their cattle were rendy for sale; they had a large stock on hand from the last session, and the stock of the new season. Feeding had cost; and they still wanted their 5 cents a pound, which the buyer had refused to give them before. They knew it had been re-ported that beef was scarce. They figured that the Portland buyer had been forced to purchase in other and more expensive fields, and they thought he would be very willing to come to their terms in order to get the meat he needed. But still the buyer did not ap-

"Feed Your Cattle."

They communicated with the Portland packers. In time they received an answer. The answer said: "Feed your catie; we don't want them." Then the growers began to investi-

Then the growers began to investigate. They discovered that the Portland buyer was trotting off to Colorado to purchase stock, that he paid a price greatly in excess of what they desired themselves, that freight cost more, that beef, therefore, was much higher in Portland, that they themselves were being blamed for the scarcity of beef," when in reality, beef had never been more plentiful—that is, on the hoof.

Seattle Refuses to Buy.

Aroused with righteous indignation the growers got together again.
They determined to boycott the Port-land buyers and sell to the Sound coun-try. The buyers of the Sound country were so notified, and the intimation went to them that there was excellent 4-cent beef going begging in the State of Oregon. Enthusiastically they waited for the reply which was to tell them, they thought, that a buyer was on the way. The reply came, if read: "We have enough beef; we don't need yours." don't need yours."

ward the little end of the more investiga-tine octopus. A little more investiga-tion convinced them that the Scattle buyer was purchasing beef in his own district, and paying a little more than the Portland buyer first offered them. the Portland buyer first offered them. They also discovered that when the Seattle packers and they had enough beef they deliberately falsified. They had beef, perhaps, but the market was by no means flooded. The growers at this juncture tripped over the invisible line, and the cat jumped out of the bag. They came to the conclusion that if they sold beef at all they had to sell it to the Portland packers. Seattle men would not take it because of the alliance. The big trust would not take it because they got all they desired in other fields not so far away from their operations. They discovered they were cornered.

Panic Among Growers.

Panic Among Growers.

Then came the panic. The under-standing between the growers meited away like snow in a Summer sun. In-dividual cattlemen wired frantically to Portland. They wanted to sell beef, and they didn't care what they got for it. They had to sell beef because the slock was feeding, and it was feeding at a great less to the grower.

In time the Portland buyer journeyed nonchalantly to the field. He said he understood the growers had beef to sell. They replied that they had. He asked what they wanted for it. They mentioned $\frac{1}{2}$ cents. The

BIGGEST PLOWING OUTFIT IN OREGON

PENDLETON, Or., March 30.-(Special.)-The largest plowing outfit in Oregon has just been unloaded in this city and will be used on a Umatilia County farm. It consists of a 30 horse-power engine and eight 14-inch plows, capable of ting 30 acres per day on level land.

The engine will pull the outfit at the rate of two and three-quarter miles per hour, and the plow cuts 112 inches or time and one-third feet at each furrow. The engine is a double-cylinder compound, the drive wheels are six feet high and are 39 inches in width, with flarges four inches deep, with which to cling to the ground. The entire outlit weighs about 36,000 pounds and is valued at $5000.

These plows are extensively used in California, Nebraska, the Dukotas and Kansas, and also in South Africa, Australia, entine and Canada, but this is the first of this kind to be brought into Eastern Oregon. This outfit will plow as many acres in a day of ten hours so 14 three-horse teams, using one 14-inch share each. One man is required to operate this plow.

"I gues there is an abundance," said the buyer, with a sinister smile.

In time the growers trotted out their beaves at 2% cents. The buyer looked Buyer Grades the Beef.

"Inferior quality," announced the "Shrinkage will be very great. Cattle will not dress up to the stand-ard. Meat will be tough. Am sorry, but will have to make allowance for all this." The growers looked surprised. They knew their cattle were never in better condition, that the shrinkage would be less than usual, that the would be less than usual, that the percentage would be higher and the meat sounder and better throughout. They stated so. The buyer remarked courteously that he was sorry to be obliged to disagree with them. The growers again naw a great light. They soid their beef at the buyer's figures, and allowed the buyer to grade the beeves according to his own idea of standard. They had to get rid of the City and Suburban and a member of the standard. They had to get rid of the standard. They had to get rid of the beef, an they did it. The beef was shipped to Portland. The packers had obtained it at a ridiculous figure. The cattle were of excellent quality. The public learned that cattle were more plentiful, and the small dealer had hopes. The poor saw visions of juicy steaks.

Prices Do Not Drop.

But alas! the prices did not drop. When asked why, the packers stated that the beef was not dressing up to the standard, that the loss amounted to a pretty figure, and they were obliged to get their money out of the meat. Dealers wired to Seattle for ment at decent figures. Scattle replied that the supply was so short she had no beef to sell to new customers—that her own trade territory demanded all. The Big Trust was appealed to, and the Big Trust stated that the price of beef was uniform with that sold by the Little Trust, that transportation was responsible for it. Then the small dealer paid the Little Trust its price, and the poor ate no julcy steaks.

Growers Have Learned Lesson.

But the cattlemen! The cattlemen had been taught a lesson. They have never since attempted to quote prices. They are thankful when they get 4 dents and 4½ cents, and when they get 5 cents they have a meason of feasting, for it is like a gift from the gods. They know the Little Trust doesn't have to do it. They have to raise beef, they can't raise anything else. Only when irrigation steps in and other things can be raised at a profit will there be a chance for a real scarcity of beef. Only then will there be a chance to make the Little Trust come to the growers' figures. The Little Trust is not worrying about that. had been taught a lesson. They have come to the growers' figures. The Little Trust is not worrying about that, however, and the growers are not contemplating improvements with money to be made at that time.

This, then, is the story of how the cattlemen who dared place a price on their own property were punished. It is also the story of how the common people were punished for thinking there was a Little Trust. They perhaps know now, instead of thinking, but they pay for their knowledge, as they did for their suspicions.

Offiver Harrington, the refractory prisoner who refuses to work on the rockpile under J. F. Johnson, guard, threatens to file oriminal proceedings against the guard when he is released from the County Jall. Under the law Harrington is not stitled to time allowance while he reentitied to time allowance while he re-fuses to work, and if this rule is enforced and he adheres to his determination not to break rock, he never will get out of jail. His sentence expires May II, and if not released on that date he will file a habeas corpus petition. Harrington says Johnson struck and threatened him, and Johnson declares Harrington interfered with the discipline of the prisoners.

At the last meeting, however, it was ancounced that contractors were to be brought up before the street committee and made to tell why they were not on time with the street improvements. What is still more surprising the bridge committee of the board will hold a meet-

Refuses to Accept County Ferry Boat

15 NOT IN FIT CONDITION

Commissioners Believe the Municipality Should Pay the Bill for Putting Albina No. 2 In Proper Shape for Use.

The County Commissioners have refused to accept the new Albina ferryboat from the city until certain changes which are deemed absolutely necessary have been made. These will cost money, and the county authorities think the city, which built the boat, should foot the bill, and not the county. The boat does not handle well when crossing the river in a strong current. Commissioner Lightner says that the new ferry, in her present condition, in a strong wind or swift current, which is often present in the river, will not do.
