TAKING PLACE OF OREGON

Plans Already Making for Thanksgiving Day Football-Game With Oregon University Delayed Till Later in Season.

UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON, Seattle, June 4.—(Special.)—It now seems probable that the Thanksgiving football game to be played in Seattle during the coming fall will be with Oregon Agricultural College. The majority of the students do not wish to wait until a late date to find out whether Stanford or the University of California will be able to come here, and besides, both of these institutions are desirous of meeting Washington earlier in the season. The high percentage of the gate receipts demanded by the Californians, as well as a set guarantee of a large amount, in case the receipts fall below the average, incline the management to search for a better financial proposition.

That a game between the Oregon Agricultural College and the University of Washington would make one of the best matches that could be played between any of the Northwest colleges, no one can deny. There has been a strong sentiment during the past year, however, to establish permanent relations with the University of Oregon for an annual Thanksgiving game to be played in Seattle. It now looks, however, as if this proposition would have to be postponed until another year, as Oregon has come to a definite agreement with the Multnomah Club, of Portland, for her Thanksgiving date. The only other institution which Washington has been considering for Thanksgiving has been the University of Idaho. From the present outlook many believe that the Idaho boys will not have an strong a team as they have claimed in the past few years, and inasmuch as Oregon Agricultural College has practically all of her old men in college, and Washington has the advantage, the game taken the schedule for the coming season under consideration and are determined that the management shall decide most of its games at an early date. At a meeting which was held on last Thursday night the question of the Thanksgiving game was given a great deal of attention, a large number of those present expressed themselves as strongly in favor of a contest with Oregon College. Captain McDonald was one of the strongest in urging to have the Webfooters in Seattle for the big game.

M'GRAW ALLOWED TO PLAY

Order of League Suspended Pending Hearing on Injunction. BOSTON, June 4.—A temporary injunction against Harry C. Pulliam, president of the National League of Baseball Clubs, was issued by Justice Shabanau, of the superior court here, today in favor of John J. McGraw, manager of the New York National League Club. The court order restrains Pulliam from enforcing a suspension and fine recently imposed upon McGraw, pending a hearing to be held at a later date. The injunction also restrains the various umpires of the National League from preventing McGraw from going onto the field in the capacity of a playing manager. McGraw was suspended for 15 days and fined $100 for alleged misconduct during a game in New York City between the Pittsburgh and New York teams.

Even those who have seen Amelia Blingman play "The Climbers" can have no quarrel with the members of the Belasco Stock Company. The performance given by that splendid organization last night will stand the most exacting comparison with any ever given of Clyde Fitch's great drama of society. That prolific playwright struck it when he gave us "The Climbers." It possesses the quality of being clever without innuendo, and cleverness is a greatly abused term. It has dramatic intensity without ever becoming grandiloquent, and for these two excellent innovations let us give thanks and lift our hats to Fitch. He deserves a modicum of deference. The piece was wisely selected as a vehicle for the Belasco players, though it was a brave thing to attempt. The really great opportunities in it are given to Lucia Moore and John Salpolla, for the author did not make a showy man of Warden, the decent lover, though he is a big, strong one. Amelia Blingman would better concentrate looking over her supply of laurels, for Lucia Moore gives a performance of Bianca Sterling, the wife of a thief, which squares up with every requirement. We are only just discovering that a great actress can come to live in Portland. "The Climbers" will do much to bring that intelligence in unto us. She has the right viewpoint, which is half the battle, and she has temperance, wit, face and genius, which latter are the other half. It is a great pleasure to see her play, and I stake my reliability on her merit. The leading man in a play like "The Climbers" is not altogether happily cast. He can't do just what he would like without making his part a consummate scandal, and so he must stand in the background and do the next best thing. Eugene Ormond succeeds in doing this so well that one is convinced he is an actor of unusual ability. His New Warden is a humorist, albeit a much nobler and more conscientious one than we are wont to meet. There was a new member of the cast in the person of Eleanor Gordon, who has naturalness and sterner as a chief stock in trade. Incidentally she is stunning in good clothes, but that is incidental. Her reception by the audience was evidence enough that she is going to be well liked here. Other members of the cast were uniformly good. It is difficult to understand how the management can afford the luxury of New York productions, but I suppose Fred Belasco knows what he is about. The gowns worn by the women last night will serve as models' models here for many a day, while the scenery and properties simply throw over all previous notions of what is required in such premises. The second act last night must have cost most as much as the annex to the Government building, and it looked every cent's worth. But why should we care? Let us rather be glad. "The Climbers" will be repeated every night, with customary matinee, until next Monday. Go and see it, friends. It is great.
