ATTORNEYS PLAN APPEAL

Senator Clings to the Hope That S preme Court May Declare Indictment Faulty or Sustain Counsel's Objections.

Forty-five years ago yesterday a young man learned in the law came to Portland and ant at the feet of George H. Williams listening to him tell of the birth and growth of the Nation. Forty-four years ago the same young man became the city attorney of Portland and one year later the Senator from Multnomah to the legislature of the state. Forty-one years ago he wielded the gavel as President of the Senate of Oregon. Thirty-three years ago John H. Mitchell became United States Senator from Oregon for the first

Day before yesterday George H. Williams, old in service, sat in the Federal Court and listened to an officer of the Government tell of the guilt of the man whom the listener had welcomed to Portland almost half a century ago, and with whom he had worked for the advancement of the state claimed by both as That evening, if he had been yet in the room, he would have seen that same man shrink under the grasp of the

To the people generally July 4 is the same this year, last year and the next, but to separate men different years have different meanings and different joys. Yes. terday was a sad celebration to Senator Mitchell and a sad anniversary. Fortyfive years ago it meant the beginning the commencement of hope, yesterday it meant the ending, the advance of the night. One beckoned to him with the hand of promise, the other withdrew the token. The first pointed the beginning of power and the maranaling of friends, the last tore away what little of influence was left and marked the retreat of associates who, like files seek the sunshine when the shadows fall.

Senator Mitchell spent a part of the day in conference with his attorneys, ex-Senator Thurston and ex-Judge Bennett, in his apartments at the Hotel Oregon. In the morning he went out into the streets, thronged with those who were celebrating the coming of freedom. But he was marked of all and the curious eyes that followed hunted him back to

Throughout the day John H. Mitchell, Jr., who came to be with his father during the time of his trouble, remained with the Senator or at Through it all remains yet a ray of however, to which the convicted clings, and that is the appeal to be made to the Supreme Court of the United The faulty indictment admitted error made by them, all are cherished as straws to which to cling. These things were gone over by the attorneys who, like physicians, look for the rift in the cloud at all times and trust for the better until the last. It must be, they say, that the Supreme Court will see the justice of their contentions and give them succor. It was not a triumphal day nor a pleas, ant anniversary, and the weight of the years is beginning to show in the yield-ing form of the Senstor. The breath of hattle has gone and he is tired of the struggle. Age shows itself in his bear-

One Juror Held Out in Five Ballots Against Conviction. .

One man on the Mitchell jury did not want to convict the Senator-so the story runs-and five times voted to acquit him of the crime alleged against him. All were sorry for the defendant, all had sympathy, and one of the number was so infigenced by his feelings that he would rather have not voted for conviction, and did not until the recommendation for mercy made to the court was incorporated n the verdict as rendered. Upon the first ballot the vote was 11 for conviction and 1 for acquittal, and this same ratio was maintained until five bal-lots had been cast. Then, in answer to the questionings of the 11 men, the one holding back the verdict stipulated juror holding back the verdict stipulated that if mercy was recommended he would vote according to the evidence. The agree ment was made and the verdict brought.
