Wyoming occupied the center of the stage at the Exposition yesterday and the limelight of public prominence shone full upon it, the land of mines, cattle ranges and broad irrigated plains being particularly ably represented and exploited by hundreds of enthusiastic visitors, among them the Chief Executive of the state, Governor Bryant B. Brooks. Governor Brooks is accompanied to Portland by his entire staff. Besides the Wyoming people in attendance, the celebration of the day was enlivened by the presence of many former residents of the state.

The former Wyoming citizens were very numerous, being attracted to the Exposition by fond remembrances of the many pleasant months or years they had spent in the state. They were only too willing to join hands with their neighbors of the past and unite in the common purpose of bringing Wyoming to the front. How well they accomplished their designs and desires, can only be appreciated by those who visited the Exposition yesterday.

Everywhere at the Fair.

Wyoming was everywhere at the Fair. It was talked about, shouted about and read about. "Are you from Wyoming?" was the popular question asked at the Exposition yesterday. The answer was always in the affirmative as the visitors to the grounds yesterday took pleasure in doing what they could in boosting Wyoming.

Wyoming badges were at a premium yesterday. The people from Wyoming came prepared to supply the demands of hundreds of people, but they were utterly swamped by the thousands who were desirous of procuring an insignia of the state. The hardened Exposition officials, who have become so accustomed to entertaining Wyoming visitors and assisting in the celebration of special days that they have begun to look upon it as a matter of routine, were among those infected with the genuine Wyoming enthusiasm. The concessionaires were caught in the rush and became so interested in entertaining the people from Wyoming that they forgot to tell about the sorrows resulting from the Sunday closing of the Trail. They gave special shows, lowered their prices of admissions in many instances and did their part in entertaining the Wyoming guests of the Exposition.

The exercises were held in the Auditorium at 10 o'clock in the morning and drew a large crowd, despite the failure of other morning events to secure a creditable attendance. President Goode delivered the address of welcome on behalf of the Exposition management. He spoke in glowing terms of the showing made by Wyoming in the agricultural and mining exhibits and thanked Governor Brooks and the people of the state for their hearty co-operation in making the Exposition a success.

Commissioner Richardson, of the Wyoming exhibits, who presided as chairman, next introduced Mayor Lane, who, in the absence of Governor Chamberlain, welcomed the visitors to Portland and Oregon. Mayor Lane won the friendship of the Wyomingites by telling them that he thought their state had reached a higher stage of civilization than that occupied by Oregon. In speaking of woman's suffrage, he stated, however, that he hoped that by next year Oregon would have redeemed herself.

Address by Governor Brooks.

Amid tremendous applause, Governor Brooks, upon his executive chair, which ever sat in the gubernatorial chair in Wyoming, was introduced. Governor Brooks is not a professional politician, but a cattleman, owning one of the largest ranches in the state. He has been a prominent figure in Wyoming because of his interest in everything pertaining to the advancement of the state, and he was elected Governor with very little opposition. All the people from Wyoming like to speak of "Our Governor," and his name is a household word. Governor Brooks, a Republican, by his clean and business-like administration, has won the admiration of his political enemies and is equally beloved by the people of both parties.

"The citizens of Wyoming have assembled at this previously beautiful and instructive Exposition to celebrate Wyoming day, and I am requested to give a short epitome of our past experiences, present conditions and future possibilities," said Governor Brooks after the applause resulting from his appearance had subsided. "Our state is changing rapidly from a purely pastoral region of flocks and herds into a great agricultural commonwealth. During the last few years land values have more than doubled; good irrigated lands selling from $30 to $75 an acre. With a population of 50,000 people, Wyoming was admitted to the Union, and today we celebrate our 15th anniversary. During these years of statehood our population has trebled, while progress in every industry has been gratifying and substantial."

Reclamation of Lands.

"The United States Government, through its reclamation service, has under way a great irrigation project in Wyoming, which, when completed will reclaim over 500,000 acres of land. These Government projects will more than double the population of Wyoming. In addition, many private enterprises are in progress of construction and thousands of acres are now open to settlement. Following in the wake of this agricultural development, which is the safe and the foundation of all wealth, will come the construction of the railroads, the building up of new towns and cities, the development of our gold, silver, copper and other minerals, the establishment of manufacturing industries and all the innumerable activities of a rapidly growing state. We need laborers and skilled mechanics of all kinds."

The exercises were concluded with an address by Associate Justice J. A. Van Orsdel, who said in part: "Fifteen years ago today Wyoming was admitted as a state. Cities and towns had sprung up, mines of incalculable wealth had been developed and vast fortunes had been amassed. No territory ever came into the Union better equipped for statehood or with a finer array of public institutions. There is a larger wealth per capita possessed by these residents of Wyoming today than in any other state or country in the world. This can be best appreciated when I state that there is yet almost a square mile of territory for every man, woman and child in the state. Wyoming is a new state and we need capital to develop our vast and varied industries."

GOVERNOR HERRICK COMING

Reception Will Be Given Ohio's Governor Tomorrow.

Governor Myron T. Herrick, of Ohio, arrives today to visit the Lewis and Clark Fair. Tomorrow at 2 P. M. a reception will be tendered him and his party under the auspices of the Ohio Society of Oregon. Judge W. M. Calkins presiding, in the building of the National Cash Register Company.

The announcement of the Governor's visit at this time was unexpected, but by the joint efforts of the Exposition management and the Ohio Society, a hearty welcome is assured. All Ohioans, whether members of the society or not, are cordially invited to meet Ohio's Chief Executive. Badges may be obtained at the offices of the president, in the Chamber of Commerce building, and the treasurer, in the Worcester building.

ADMISSIONS, 16,102.

The attendance at the Exposition yesterday was very satisfactory, there being 16,102 admissions to the grounds. The average daily attendance is steadily increasing.

Representatives of state food and dairy departments met in their ninth annual convention at the Exposition yesterday.

PORTLAND SHOULD GIVE MORE LOYAL SUPPORT TO LEWIS AND CLARK EXPOSITION

In the crowds that pass through the turnstiles of the Exposition each day there are comparatively few Portland people—probably not more than 15 or 20 per cent. It is outside patronage that is making the agreeably heavy attendance returns and assuring the success of the Exposition. That the percentage of Portlanders passing into the Fair grounds daily should be much heavier there can be no question. Portland and vicinity should supply at least half the attendance. That the city had not the slightest difficulty in flooding the Exposition grounds with a tremendous crowd, the opening day, Fourth of July and other special occasions bear ample witness. Only local participation should be steady, and not spasmodic, inasmuch as it is this community to which the major portion of the benefits will accrue.

Not that the city is setting a precedent in this matter, for it has been the complaint of other Expositions that local patronage was not heavy. Only there is more need for local patronage at the Lewis and Clark Exposition than at those of the past. The outlying territory within a radius of 500 miles is not very populous. Therefore the Fair must draw its attendance from home or from afar. Answering the call to see a great new country—a veritable fairland of scenic beauty and natural wealth—people from a distance have responded liberally and have assured the success of the Exposition enterprise. Portland people should add to the success of the Fair. The attendance of local people should make a big showing each day. Go to the Fair as often as possible. There is pleasant recreation there, or a liberal education. Added to those things is the duty of supporting an enterprise, the fullest success of which means everything to Portland.

preparatory to spending a week discussing matters of importance to those interested in pure-food legislation. Yesterday's session was largely attended from all parts of the Union, and was held in the Auditorium.

The principal address of the day was delivered by W. W. McConnell, of Mankato, Minn., president of the National Association of State Dairy and Food Commissioners. President McConnell discussed the question of securing purity in food products, and showed what he believed to be the most feasible methods of dealing with the problem that confronts the citizens of the United States.

President McConnell presided over the exercises and introduced J. W. Bailey, of the Oregon Food and Dairy Department, who welcomed the visitors to the state in behalf of the people of Oregon. Following Mr. Bailey, Mayor Lane opened the doors of Portland to the visitors, and expressed his sympathy with the efforts of those who desire to secure better food regulations.

Welcome to Exposition.

Colonel H. E. Dusch represented President Goode and the Exposition officials, and welcomed the visitors in their behalf. J. B. Noble, of Hartford, Conn., was introduced by President McConnell. Mr. Noble thanked those who had extended the welcome, and expressed the appreciation of the food and dairy delegates for the generous reception they had received. Mr. Noble spoke of the grandeur of the Lewis and Clark Exposition, and what great difference existed between the question of pure food as it now existed, and what was thought of the question when Lewis and Clark made their eventful journey in 1804.

President McConnell then took the floor and discussed the food question from its earliest inception. He said in part:

In the 18th century and in the three centuries following, comparatively little progress was made in pure-food legislation. Pure-food agitation continued, however, with some degree of progress in France and England. The latter, at the present time probably has the best pure-food laws found in the world. Since the year 1877 there has been an attempt to pass pure-food legislation in this country. We have quite extensive municipal and state laws in some cases models of their kind, but the necessity of a national food law covering the whole question in its relation to manufacture and commerce between the states and territories is apparent to all thinking men. The lack of uniformity not only facilitates the work of adulteration of food products, but it tends to confusion and uncertainty in the preparation of proper foods for the market.

In the matter of labels and packages, the congressional and conflicting mass of state legislation make it imperative that the manufacturer prepare different packages for each

WILL CLIMB MOUNT HOOD

Three Clubs Unite for the Undertaking.

Mazamas, Appalachians and Sierras Will Ascend Snow-Capped Peak in Large Numbers.

The mountain climbers made a picturesque start from the Portland Hotel yesterday morning, when, armed with alpenstocks and canes, and dressed in rough garb, fitted for such an occasion, they rolled away in automobiles amid the cheers and good wishes of a large crowd of assembled hotel guests. As a sufficient number of machines to accommodate the party could not be obtained, about 25 went up to Hood River on the morning train, expecting to take coaches to Cloud Camp Inn yesterday afternoon, and arrive there in time to make the ascent today. If all plans work well the parties will meet on the summit, those who went in automobiles by way of Government Camp returning via the south route, and the party ascending by way of Cloud Camp coming down in the machines. This will give all an opportunity of seeing both sides of the mountain.

The two parties were composed of members of the Sierra, Appalachian and Mazama Clubs. Both are expected to return to Portland by tomorrow night.

with the Secretary of State and paying the necessary fee. He asserts that the defendants are engaged in the manufacture and sale of brass and metal badges similar to those which he has placed upon the Portland market, and asks the court to permanently to enjoin them from so doing. The argument yesterday was by O'Day, counsel for Aronson, and C. M. Idleman and Alex Bernstein for the defendants. On a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction, granted at the time the suit was filed.

O'Day contended that the trade mark possessed by Aronson gives him an exclusive right for the manufacture of these badges, chains, scarf pins, hatpins, etc., containing the heads Lewis and Clark and surrounded with the words and figures, Lewis and Clark Exposition, 1905. Counsel on the opposing side argued that Aronson was simply selling his copyright, and not his article; that Lewis and Clark heads were not subject to trade mark, and further, that a trade mark was only intended to designate a certain brand or quality of goods. Counsel said: "The mere fact of his having a date and names around the heads amounts to nothing. The mere fact that he can file something with the Secretary of State gives him no better right than he had before. A trade mark is what he is selling, not a trade mark that makes the articles and designates the quality."

Mr. Bernstein contended that so long as the design of the others was different from that of Mr. Aronson, and does not deceive the public, an injunction would not lie.

O'Day asserted that the registered trade mark gave Aronson the sole privilege, and said if everybody could infringe upon his rights his copyright was not worth anything. Judge Frazer was inclined to the opinion that no person had a monopoly around the heads amounts to nothing. The mere fact that he can file something with the Secretary of State gives him no better right than he had before. A trade mark is what he is selling, not a trade mark that makes the articles and designates the quality."

Plans for the coming year were thoroughly discussed, and resolutions passed by both associations expressing appreciation for courtesies shown and help given and received. The National officers feel that the Oregon women are well organized and will conduct the campaign on business lines. Miss Anthony, accompanied by her sister and Mrs. S. A. Gross, of Chicago, leave today for a mountain trip, but Dr. Anna Shaw will remain through the American Medical Convention, and will fill many social engagements. Mrs. Carr had returned to New York, and Dr. Antoinette Stone Blackwell, in company with Mrs. C. M. Cartwright, has gone to Milwaukee. Henry Blackwell and Miss Blackwell will remain throughout the week, and Mrs. Ida Husted Harper will be here several weeks.

WILL SHOOT IF CALLED THIEF

Message Which Witness Said She Was Asked to Deliver.

MRS. LITT'S ACCUSATION

She Declares She Gave Mrs. Wood Five Hundred and Ninety Dollars to Deliver to Her Husband, H. B. Litt.

"If Mrs. Litt takes the witness stand and brands me as a thief, I will shoot her." This testimony was given by Mrs. M. E. Daggett, in Judge Sears' court yesterday, at the trial of the suit of H. B. Litt against Mrs. Litt, Mrs. J. B. Wood, and cover $500. Mrs. Daggett is an acquaintance of both Mrs. Wood and Mrs. Litt, and she testified that Mrs. Wood called upon her at the Hotel Cecil, Seattle, in September last, and in the course of their conversation told her to deliver this message to Mrs. Litt.

Mrs. Litt says that on June 17, 1904, at Nome, Alaska, she gave a letter addressed to her husband, H. B. Litt, at Portland, containing $500 in currency, to Mrs. Wood to deliver, which was not done. She did not apprise Mrs. Wood of the contents of the letter, and Mrs. Wood was at the time about to take passage on the steamer Victoria, from Nome to Seattle.

Mr. Litt early in July received a letter, so he testified, from his wife, who went to Nome with a stock of goods, advising him that the money had been sent to him. He learned that the Woods were in Seattle, and telegraphed to them at that place, and also sent dispatches to them at Green River Springs. Failing to receive the letter with the money, he went to Seattle and called on the Woods, who told him he was trying to blackmail him.

Regarding her conversation with Mrs. Wood, Mrs. Daggett testified that Mrs. Wood informed her she received a letter from Mrs. Litt, but could not deliver it in Portland in person because she had no intention of coming here. Mrs. Litt knew as well as she did that there was no money in the letter.

The witness, testifying, further explained that she and Mrs. Litt went together from Seattle to Nome on the steamer Senator, and she let Mrs. Litt have a ticket she had previously purchased for her sister. Mrs. Litt did not pay for the ticket at the time because she owed Mrs. Litt a bill. Alluding to this circumstance, Mrs. Daggett stated that Mrs. Wood said to her: "The fact that you bought Mrs. Litt a ticket and other things showed that she had no money," and Mrs. Daggett said she replied, "To the contrary, I know Mrs. Litt did have money."

The evidence disclosed that Mrs. Wood and Mrs. Elizabeth Jourdan conducted a millinery and ladies' furnishing goods store at Nome, and having retired from business just at the time Mrs. Litt arrived turned over the store building to the latter. Mrs. Litt had known Mrs. Wood only two or three days when she gave her the letter said to contain $500.

The case for the defense has not yet begun, but depositions on file show that Mr. Wood asserts that he turned over the letter to the purser of the steamship Victoria, together with a number of others, to be placed in the mail pouch on the steamer, and Mrs. Wood remarked, upon ascertaining such fact that she had been asked to mail the letter at Seattle, but made no further comment. Mr. Wood is a well-known mining man, and bears a first-class reputation. He was stated in court yesterday. He and his wife are represented by C. S. Blackett, an attorney from Nome; James Gleason and John M. Geairin. Dan J. Malarkey appears for Litt.
