promise of doing work of the highest "A Fool and His Money" was written by George Broadhurst at his best and ripest, and Willie Collier, greatest of American comedians, was intended for that Collier has relinquished the rights to it and given it over to stock, it is important to know that a leading man, supposed to be all the time heroic. is delegated to succeed Collier in the principal role, and is all that a comedy-loving audience could expect. Mr. Ormonde appears to better advantage than in anyno one, no matter how captious, could find fault with his performance. We are accustomed to watching Eugene Ormonde in swashbuckling or lovemaking roles. We want him to be the recipient of or the striver for a lover's rewards always. It is out of all reason that he be simply a comedian who hopes all things and strives for all things without being already assured of them. Now when he does it: when he succeeds Collier, the foremost among American comedians, the test is put upon him all the stronger. In every respect he meets the obligation and discharges it. I beg leave here and now to say that Eugene Ormonde is a versatile actor, which we have not wholly reckoned with before.

In "A Fool and His Money" he proves that he is a comedian of unusual merit and we have recently seen Collier him-self. He fits the part beautifully and gives a very fine performance of the prin-

The very excellent stage manager and "heavy" man of the Belasco Company does a light-comedy role in "A Fool and His Money," which is a delight and a continuous source of amusement. Mr. Sainpolts is a comedian of spiendid abil-ity. I leave it to anybody who saw his "Baron von Hinkelwitzer," to say if he is not a successful German comedian Clarence Montaine makes a very funny "Jean Girard," a farce comedy artist of parts, Miss Moore succeeds well as the heroine who is looking for a real man in the New York "smart set" and Virginia Brissac, Eleanor Haber and the rest of the company do well in their respective parts. "A Fool and His Money" is a delightful farce. A splendid theatrical entertainment for a Summer night and is deserving of large patronage. It will run all week with the usual mat Go and see it. Last evening, so Mrs. Epstein told the police, she went to her husband's shop in company with her sister, and told him she had learned be spent the evening be-fore at the Oaks in the company of an-other woman.
