Explains His Purpose.

Commissioner Hsing explains that his province would have had a display earlier but that it was expected the Chinese gov-ernment would have a big showing. In-stead the government allowed its claims on exhibit space to go by default into the hands of a few Mongolian ornament and knick-knack merchants. About three months ago a high official of Shantung was in Portland and he stated at the time that he would see his province properly represented since China, as a whole was to do nothing. Nothing was thought of the promise, however, until Commis-sioner Hsing appeared at the exhibits' department yesterday morning and pre-sented his passports and crodentials to Assistant Director of Exhibits H. B. Hardt.

Commissioner Hsing is an exceptional Chinese of the type which bespeaks more progressive times ahead for China. Al-though educated in China he speaks Eng-lish fairly well and has forsworn his queue. He is accompanied by two young Chinese students who are here to enter California State University. The students are on their first journey away from the Orient and American conveniences and utilities have kept them away from their sleep since they landed at San Francisco several days ago. They were particularly impressed with the Exposition, and the wondering almond-eyes were as round as cidental optics all the time they were on the Fair grounds

Is Seeking Foreign Markets,

What the people of Shantung province are interested in is getting good markets for things they have to sell, so Commis-sioner Hsing stated. He explained that when he said people he meant the better classes for the others, like cattle, did not bother about thinking at all. Re-garding the boycotting of American goods he says the government was out of sympathy with any such action although the merchants had not the friendliest possible feeling toward America.

The Chinese government feels that e best classes of their people should be allowed to come and go at will," said the commissioner, in effect. "I do not think you ought to be expected to take our worst people for they are not much good to any country." Work on the Shantung province booth will be started at once and the exhibit will be installed as soon as the booth is ready,

The Exhibitors' Club at the Lewis and Clark Exposition wrangled while trying to elect officers yesterday at the National Cash Register auditorium with the result that many of the mem-bers are wondering whether the club still exists.
