Wide Scope o. Organization.

The National Irrigation Congress is confined in its operations largely to the Western states, as is the other, but it is of a wider character because the growth of reclamation concerns more directly the whole country than the improvements largely of a Western character demanded by the combined effort of Western men through the organization that concluded its labors on Saturday. In the deliberations of the Congress this week will be heard men whose ability has placed them in the foremost ranks of American engineering, internal immigra-tion work, commercial enterprise, transportation affairs and the successful accomplishment of the task of making lux-uriants harvests grow where before was only desert waste, going several degrees beyond the maxim of "Making two blades of grass grow where one grew before." One of the sections of the Congress is virtually a convention of the leading en-gineers of the Reclamation Service. whose genius has been concentrated in construction of the great irrigation pro-jects that have received official sanction and are to be constructed out of the fund cdeated from the sale of public lands during the past three years. The official roster of the organization is remarkable for the prominence and standing of the men whose time and effort has been given this great problem of the age. Below, the entire list is given.
