The fireboat Williams was at the coal bunkers, opposite the Albina dock. The crew was coaling the vessel, which had returned from the disastrous blaze at St. Johns. She crossed the stream immediately, prepared for action. Chief Campbell who arrived at that time, was obliged to order a retreat of the heat, as the heat was so intense that he feared she would burn if run too close.

Once adjusted in a safe place, three heavy streams, running through all the hose available, were turned on the fire. Firemen picked up the lines and carried them to within a short distance from the south end of the Albina dock, where to the best advantage they fought the flames and saved houses and railroad property to the cost.

Pumps Water From Slough.

Engine No. 8 was stationed where water could be pumped from a slough. A stream was handled from the north end, shutting off danger to the Oceanic dock, which was saved in this manner. The four
