It's hard to appreciate the long-felt want which such things are supposed to fill, but then, after all, there are a lot of people who don't want to work, so they become actors (?). It all fits into the general scheme of things we must have actors (?) and "greatest plays of the age." I forget what the acting-up was about. There seemed to be a very naughty person who framed up trouble and kept the victim in more trouble than he would have had at a French ball. It was called "A Wicked Woman," and I believe it. The audience that it drew was positively surprising. I wendered where that audi-ence came from. After all, tastes differ, and I'd like to know whose business it is if some of us did like the "greatest play

On First and Second Trials Colored It in Favor of the Defendants.

REASON FOR SO DOING

Declares That He Did Not Say Heney Was a Bad Man, but One Be Feared by Wrong-Doers.

John S. Watkins was the man who furished the fireworks at the Williamson trial yesterday afternoon, when he testified one minute that he had favored the defendants in the first and second trials and in the next breath that he told friends of the defendants that he was going to change his testimony for fear that he would be indicted if he did not, for Mr.

Heney was a man to be feared.

George N. Gaylord was put upon the stand at the opening of court in order that the defense could cross-examine him, but nothing of importance was brought out in the examination. John S. Watkins was the next witness and his identifies. was the next witness, and his identification of his final-proof papers brought on a flow of words from both Mr. Bennett and Mr. Heney which could not be stopped until it had exhausted its force, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Bennett contended lengthily that according to the law it was not allowable for the Government to make attempt to prove conspiracy to suborn perjury from the final papers, but that the applications were the only proper documents to be considered. Mr. Heney took the opposite view, as did Judge Hunt, though the court in ruling on the matter held that he would keep the subject in mind during the real keep the subject in mind during the trial and would consider it, and if the point raised by the defendants should appear correct, he would rule upon the evidence

Watkins' Sensational Testimony.

At 3 o'clock Mr. Watkins began to tell the story which had been interrupted by the argument of the morning. He said that he had been told by Campbell Dun-can that Biggs had advised him to take up timber claims, telling him to get all the men he could to file, as Dr. Gesner would like to have the land taken, and would give $500 a claim for it as soon as title had passed. The witness had then gone to see Biggs, who had corrobo-rated this story. Watkins said that rated this story. Watkins said that he had not liked the idea at the time and had told Biggs so, but that afterward he had seen the defendant again when had been told that no contract could be made, but that an agreement could be entered into between the claimants and Gesner. The witness had then gone up to the timber to see about taking the claim, and there had introduced Gaylord to William

What Biggs Told Watkins

According to the testimony of Watkins, Biggs had not told him of the definition Biggs had not told him of the definition of perjuty, according to the provisions of the law. Biggs had, however, told him that Williamson and Gesner did not want too many from one family to file on claims at the same time, for, if they did, they might get into trouble with the Government. At the suggestion of the witness Biggs had calculated just how much he would get out of his claim if he took it up according to the proposals of Gesner, and had found that the net returns would be between $70 and $78.

On the cross-examination Mr. Bennett brought out some interesting evidence.

ed. "Heney said when I was before the grand jury that if the truth was not told at the trial the grand jury would be in session afterwards."

He Feared an Indictment.

"Didn't you consider that a threat," persisted Mr. Bennett, but the witness said that he did not.
"Now," continued Mr. Bennett, "didn't you say, some days ago, in front of the Courthouse while talking to S. Starr, that you were going to change your testimony; that you hated to do it, but that you were afraid of indictment, if you not what the Government people said that made me change it. The defendants knew that I had not testified right, and so did the Government; they knew that I had not testified right, and so did the Government; they knew that I had not testified right, and so did the government; they knew that I had not testified right, and so did the government; they knew that I had not testified right, and so did the government; they knew that I had not testified right, and so did the Government; they knew that I had favored the defendants."

"Didn't you tell Doug Lawson and Green Beard that you were going to tes-tify that there was a contract, to save yourself from indicament?" was the next

"No, sir," said Watkins, "I have not testified yet that there was a contract, but there was a fair and square understanding. Biggs said that there could be no contract, but that there could be an understanding."

Mr. Bennett then got back at Mr. Heney a little. "Didn't Mr. Heney," he asked of Watkins, "tell you that he was a bad man, and was to be feared?"
