HAS NOT TURNED HIS HEAD.-The prospects of receiving a large slice from the millions of an English estate has not turned the head of C. B. James, one of the heirs. He is foreman of the East Side warehouse of the Portland Seed Comany. From the recent information reually he will get several hundred thousand dollars as his share. He has ascertained from Attorney Whittaker, of Ohio, who is looking after the interests of the Amer-tean heirs, that the matter is being pushed as rapidly as such cases can be in an English court. The higher court of chan-cery has ordered the estate divided, but that does not mean the immediate divion and distribution of the estate and may be years before the estate can e finally apportioned. Mr. James is one he finally apportioned. Mr. James is one of 125 heirs, and there are other more remote descendants. Mr. James lives at Arleta, and the prospects of getting his share of this large estate has not changed his manner of life, and he keeps

By Arthur A. Greene. The South has never been fully reconstructed. There's no halo of romance over New Jersey or Utah, but give us anything which suggests the region south of Mason and Dixon's line and immediate-ly we hark back to the age of chivalry with fair maids to be rescued from donion keeps and brave knights to do the rescu-ing. We forget that Southern men have long since left off wearing small clothes with dress swords and now wear the kind at $6.60 the suit, marked down from $7. We forget also that these same men get their morals and their ideas of social feetles from the same sources as the boys who work behind the gingham counter of Wriggler's Boston Palace in Southern women also read the Boline. Southern women also read the Delineator and Edward Bok's tips to debutantes. We're all just the same who stand up when the band plays "The Star-Spangled Banner," no matter what the geographical lines, but we still have the notion that romance is still working full hours in the South, where they speak the English of the west coast of Africa. That's the reason why the South is not fully reconstructed and the war forgot.

A polygiot generation will come after us which will know better. Because we are still too near slavery days we want just the sort of things as "Under Southern Skies" on our stage and in our novels.

Lottie Blair Parker, who wrote the piece some time after "Way Down East." knew our National weakness, and she played upon it to the extent of writing a very good sort of play about down South Colonels, their daughters and the tropic love of scions of old families. The South is the only place where we get our modern Romeos and Juliets. Else but for this we would not have such plays as "Under Southern Skies." In many ways it is good and interesting and proper and an audience which filled the Marquam last night liked it very much. There are no celebrities in the cast on this particular occasion. There are, in fact, no actors or actresses who rise above the mediocre, but they give an acceptable performance and make the play worth the toll we pay at the door. The company managers have dressed the play with very good scenery and do not jar our preconceived notions of things. The company is good enough and the atmosphere is well enough preserved to keep up the delusion that down South things are different than they are in Mackamas County. The lady who is modestly known as Miss Carlotta carries off the honors from the rest of the cast as the old negro
