BREAKS COLONELS' HEARTS

At Last Moment Before Horse-Show Governor Orders Dress Suits, and His Staff Has to Hide Its Splendor.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Oct. 12.—(Special)—Unmoved by witticisms of the Portland press regarding the appearance of his staff colonels at the Lewis and Clark Exposition in gold-braided uniforms, Governor Folk put the lid on the uniforms so firmly that his colonels were obliged to appear at the St. Louis horse-show in civilian dress suits, most of them hired at the last moment for the occasion.

Newton Mourns Lost Glory.

General Emmet Newton, who is said to wear a tiny piece of gold braid on his watch chain, so fond is he of it, walked the corridor in anguish.

Modest as Violets They Seem.

It was not the radiant and iridescent staff the crowd had hoped and expected to see, and when the party entered as modest as "a violet by a mossy stone," half hidden from the eye, comparatively few persons in the audience recognized the star.

Why Uniforms Were Doffed.

"I decided," he said, "that, as this was to be a horse-show and not a staff-show, it was better to leave off the uniforms."
