USING FOREST RESERVES

Cut and Sold.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Oct. 15 .- The new rules for the National forest reserves, announced by the Secretary of Agriculture on July 1, were made to give freer use of the reserves to the residents of the states in which they are situated. Experience has already shown that they are welcomed. The West understands what this means better than does the East. From the first the East has believed in the reserves and declared that there could not be too many of them; but in the West the first effect ir proclamation was widespread It was feared that the reserves alarm. It was feared that the reserves would check the development of the region, would burden neighboring communities with taxes, and would prevent the taking for local needs of the timber which lay close at hand. Both in the Bast and in the West the wrong idea prevailed that a reserved forest was not for use.

A forest reserve is meant to yield up its wealth, as a farm does, or a stream which turns the wheels of many mills.

which turns the wheels of many mills. In the long run it should both guard and increase the resources of the country in which it lies.

The mere creation of forest reserves, without provision for their administration, was therefore both ineffectual and annoying to local interests dependent upon their resources. Consequently the of the Interior, in 1896, requested the National Academy of Sciento recommend a National forest pol This resulted in the passage of the act of June 4, 1897, under which, with several subsequent amendments, forest reserves are now administered.

On the theory that the management of land, not of forests, was chiefly in-voived, this law gave the Secretary of the Interior authority over the reserves, and provided that their surveying, map-ping and general classification should be done by the United States Geological Survey, and the execution of administrative work by the General Land Office.

The result was not satisfactory. The technical and complex problems arising from the necessary use of forest and range soon demanded the introduction of scientific methods and scientific methods and a technically trained force, which could not be pro-vided under the existing system. The advice and services of the Bureau of Forthe law, could be but imperfectly utilized. The necessity of consolidating the various branches of Government forest work bycame apparent and was urged apon Congress by the President and all 160 mer the secutive officers concerned. Finally, the act of February I, 1906, transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture entire jurisdiction over the forest reserves except in matters of surveying and passage of title.

Scientific forester means with the secretary of the secretary of Agriculture entire jurisdiction over the forest reserves except in matters of surveying and passage of title.

Scientific forestry means wise use—not the locking up of forest wealth, but putting it to profit under well-known laws which control the right utilization of the forest. It is just because a second crop is desirable that the first crop calls for the forester's ax, and the forester's skill is again needed in the reservation of seed trees and, above all, in protection free.

So when the reserves were transferred to the pare of the Forest Service, in the to the care of the Forest Service, in the Department of Agriculture, work was at once begun to bring the forests into large or use, to develop their resources both for the needs of settlers and for the good of the forest itself. The office was moved nearer to the applicant; that is, more authority was given to the forest officers on the reserves, so that settlers entitled to the free use of timber, as well as those wishing to purchase timber in small without delay. Whenever timber is want-ed on a larger scale, experts are assigned to report on the advisability of a sale and where large transactions are in due course completed, the timber is removed under contracts which provide for a second crop by fixing a diameter limit, by careful log-ging methods, and by burning the slash to prevent fires. Twenty-two forest as-sistants, assigned as technical assistants to forest supervisors, are at present makto forest supervisors, are at present making working plans. spect and report upon all the work done on the reserves.

Besides these technically trained foresters, there are also employed forest supervisors, rangers and guards. To these men is given general administration and care of the reserves. They must know their regions, be familiar with local conditions and combine good sense, independence and the physical, mental and moral qualities which make good woodsmen.

The Secretary of Agriculture has, under the law, discretion to allow or refuse free use of forest reserve timber and atono by "bona fide aettlers, miners, residents and prospectors." This free use is intended merely to provide for the immediate needs of the individual himself, not to permit him to cut timber for sale to others. Free use is expressly refused to aswmill proprietors, owners of large establishments or commercial enterprises, and companies and corporations. The free-use privilege is also refused to any treemaster. free-use privilege is also refused to any

Under the present scheme of adminis tration all timber on forest reserves which can be cut safely and for which there is actual need is for sale. Applications to purchase are invited. Green timber may be sold, except where its removal makes a second crop doubtful, reduces the tim-ber supply below the point of safety or injures the streams. All dead timber is

There are three classes of timber sales. Setting aside California, where every sale of any class of timber must be adver-tised for 60 days, the classes are briefly these: The first includes dead timber these: The first includes dead timber worth not more than $20, on application to a forest ranger or a deputy forest ranger; the second, dead and living timber, worth not more than $100, for which the forest supervisor's approval must be secured; and the third, timber worth more than $100, which must be advertised, and can, as a rule, be approved only by a forester. All timber must be paid for, in dying of a broken heart.

Action in Moroccan Affair Was Purely Friendly.

EFFORT IS TO CONTINUE

French Appreciation Is to Be Shown in Sending of Naval Squadron to Genoa to Greet King Victor Emmanuel.

ROME, Oct. 15.-In connection with the alleged revelations regarding the svents which preceded the resignation of the Prench Minister, M. Delcasse, the fol-lowing semiofficial communication has been issued here;

"The action taken by Italy at Paris, London and Berlin, in connection with the Moroccan affair, was absolutely friendly and conciliatory and in the interests of peace. The action was not fruitless, as owing to it France accepted the confer-ence proposed by Germany, which the former originally opposed, while Italy was able to induce Germany to agree to the fundamental conditions claimed to be dis-cussed by the conference. Foreign Min-ister Titton communicated this to M. Barrere, the French Ambassador to Italy, and nothing else."

It is also understood that the Italian ernment will continue to use its in-nce at Paris and Berlin for an understanding between France and Germany The relations between Italy and France continue to be most friendly, the French government having emphatically denied a speech attributed to Premier Rouvier, which was considered disrespectful to-ward Italy. Indeed, as one evidence of these good relations, France will send a naval squadron to Genoa to greet King Victor Emmanual, who is going there October is to inaugurate the new harbor

STERNBERG WILL SOON RETURN

No Change of Ambassadors Will Be Made at Washington.

BERLIN, Oct. 15.—A comprehensive denial is given officially of those paragraphs appearing in the German press to the effect that Baron Speck von Sternberg is likely to retire from the post of German Ambassador to the United States on account of delicate health. The question of a change of Ambassadors at Washington has not een considered.

Baron von Sternberg never looked better. He will be given an audience by Emperor William on October 17, and will sail for the United States on the Kaiser Wilhelm II on October 24. Baroness von Sternberg is recovering from the operation performed on her ankle October 6. The operation was apparently successful.

HAD TO HIDE IT

A mother wrote us recently that she had to keep Scott's Emulsion under lock and key -her children used to drink it whenever her back was turned. Strange that children should like something that is so good for them. It's usually the other way. Scott's Emulsion makes children comfortable, makes them fat and rosy-cheeked. Perhaps that's why they like it so much-they know it makes them feel good.
