Smells of the Stable.

When the plan for the present Ciy Hall was in an embryonic state under Mayor West's administration it was suggested by men who had lived elsewhere that it would be folly for the city to build a combination City Hall and fire departa combination City Hart and the depart-ment on account of the aroma that would arise from the stables and permeate the entire building. The city had a lot on which a building for the fire department and jail could have been erected, leaving the Council free to plan a building sole y for City Hall purposes. The old City Council and Mayor, with one exception, ignored the statements of those who had gone through a combina-tion experience in other cities and built the combination hall. It took only two sessions of the Council in the new build-ing to find out that where horses are stabled underneath city solons a stench will arise, and the new building, one of the prettiest imaginable in an architectural way, is already destined to be an ill-smelling place on a warm Summer day, and on every day for that matter.

A Little Church History.

Bishop Keator, of this Episcopal dio cese, has left an unpleasant taste in the mouths of some members of the church here which the new pastor, Mr. Barnes, of Seattle, may be able to eradicate. The long and sustaining suit of the church is a society of women known as St. An-drew's Guild. In the past they kept the church on its feet and built the rectory. Some time ago a Mr. George, an apostle of the high church cult, was sent here and immediately began to sit down on the guild, because they gave dances to raise funds to meet church expenses. Bishop Keator must have sustained Mr. George, for the guild did no work after he landed here, although the members worked half-heartedly in an individual ef-fort to do things. When Mr. George went away the church was left slient and alone except at long intervals. Meanwhile the hishop accepted the rent of the rectory, which had been erected out of dancing money, and applied it to doing good in whatever way he thought best. The church has finally a pastor and the old guild members like him and if he gets Bishop Keator must have sustained Mr. How to Cure Corns and Banions.
