INTERVIEWS BORE PRINCE

Every-Day Talks to the Newspaper Men, Though Met in Good-Natured Spirit, Have Become Very Irksome.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.-Five thoucand persons, visited the armored cruiser Drake, the flagship of Rear-Admiral Prince Louis of Battenberg. between the hours of 1 and 4 o'clock today. A crowd numbering half as many more arrived after the ship had been closed to visitors for the day.

The Prince spent the morning quietly, went for an automobile ride in the of Mayor McClellan at dinner.

A mistake about the hour at which norning service began prevented the Prince from worshipping in Old Trinity, as he had planned Thinking service began at 11 o'clock, he made arrangements to leave the ship at 10:45. Just about that time he received a note from the British Consul-General, in-forming him that 10:30 was the hour for service and asking the cause of his delay. The Prince regretted the mistake and rather than put in an apmistake and rather than put in an ap-pearance when the service was half over, decided to remain on board and spent the remainder of the morning answering some of the letters with which he has been flooded since his arrival here.

To the keen annoyance of the Prince. his remarks several days ago about the disastrous effect upon the tall buildings in New York of the combined fire of 18 warships anchored in New York River have been misinter-preted as a criticism of New York de-fenses. In reply to the direct ques-

"Do you think the combined fleet of vessels from their anchorages in the North River could destroy the tall buildings in New York?" the Prince said he certainly did think such a suit would follow a bombardment di-rected from the anchorage. Naval officers of both squadrons regret that the remark should have been misinter-preted, or incorrectly reported.

"It is like asking if you touched a coatch to a haystack would it burn?" said the Prince today. "As a matter of fact, there is no reason why any naval force should seek to destroy buildings which could easily be reconstructed. I desire that this matter be put correct-ly, for an impression has been made which I had not the slightest notion of conveying. The daily interviewing of the Prince, in their attentions to all visitors and officers and men devoted a great deal of time to answering questions and showing the visitors all about the saip. When I o'clock came a double line of people was formed along half of the pier and was kept moving throughout the three hours the ship was open to ments for admission The visitors were much interested in the portable ballroom, which has been put in place and extends for 70 feet along the boat deck. It is inclosed in heavy red and white striped canvas and the interior is decorated with British and American flags. The first dance in the ballroom will be given tomorrow evening, when the warrant officers of the Drake will entertain 300 warrant officers from the other American and British warships. The grand ball which the Prince gives Tuesday night will be a brilliant affair. Tomorrow night the Prince and Admiral Evans with their flag and commanding officers, will attend the dinder at Coney Island, which the American bluejackets will give the British sallors.

The commanding and junior officers of the British and American squadrons are being constantly entertained in New York by friends at luncheons, dinners and theater parties. The warrant officers of the American squadron are also entertaining the British warrant officers extensively. officers extensively.

Sallors from the British cruiser Cumberiand today saved the lives of 14 persons who were upset in a yacht boat while on their way to view the combined fleets in the North River. When the boat, which had come from Staten Island and contained eight men, three women and three children capsized while going about, men from the Cumberland went to the rescue and succeeded in bringing all safe E.
