when it comes it brings good cheer"especially in church music. For weeks, and in some cases months. Portland ists have been busy at work rehearsing for the one great musical event at the latter end of the church year, and the result of these labors will now shortly be heard. The various programmes are fully up to the Chrisimas average. Naturally, at this season, the choirs at the Catholic and Protestant Episcopal churches will render more elaborate musical pro-grammes, but in these denominations the pelucipal services will take place Monday, Christmas day. Other denominations will largely observe tomorrow in connection with their usual church services. But there will be muste for everybody, for two whole days. Special features late tomorrow night will be the ante-midnight Christmas services at Trinity and St. David's Protestant Episcopal churches. Tomorrow's Christmas music at various Portland churches:

He has extensive livestock and mining interests in this state, in Utah and in Mexico, being associated with J. D. Wood, the miner and stockman. It is claimed for him that he is one of the most influential men of his section and also one of the most popular. In the last Senatorial contest he was not aligned with the Borah forces, and his present stand is therefore the more significant.

Men from all portions of the state who have been in the capital during the past two weeks have approved the convention plan, and they will go to work at their homes to build up the sentiment neces-sary to bring about the innovation. The view taken of the subject by some who are not particularly favorable to The view taken of the subject by some who are not particularly favorable to Borah is that the party cannot afford to repudlate the plan of making a nomination in convention. These reason that Senator Dubels will certainly secure a nomination from the Democratic convention, and that it will be necessary for the Republicans to name a candidate if the subject he once brought into the convention; that the people would resent it if the principle were voted down. With a vigorous column demanding such a policy and with the feeling prevailing that the party cannot afford to reject the principle, it seems quite certain the Senatorship will be settled in the manner, proposed, so far as it can be settled by acposed, so far as it can be settled by action of the Republican party.

This was very noticeable among the men attending the State Woolgrowers' Convention. They discussed the situation very freshy while here. It developed that a great proportion of them were in favor of the election of Borah, and all supporting him declared it their desire that the convention should select the candidate. A good many men from some of the southeastern counties, where it was not felt Borah's position was absolutely secure, took occasion to declare he would have the support of those counties without doubt.

It has been stated that Governor Gooding would not favor the nomination of a candidate for Senator by the convention, but friends of his who were here with the woolgrowers gave it as their belief that he would not offer opposition. They pointed out that he had entered into an obligation to keep his hands off the Senatorial contest, and, as the proposed plan could not injure his chances for a renomination, he could not well oppose it. Indeed, the visitors generally thought the plan would materially strengthen the Governor. Borsh and his friends, they said, were not fightling the Governor, and they would be in a position to aid him materially if the convention about his propose to aid him materially if the convention about his propose to aid him materially if the convention about he controlled on the Senatorial question by the Borsh supporters. This support, they pointed out, would not ready position to keep his fully go to the Governor if he simply held fast to the programme of not interfering, making his nomination absolutely certain.

Moreover, this is the view of Borah's friends generally. As in all such cases, there are a few who feel antagonistic to the Governor but these will all give their support to such a programme.
