be led to suppose from reports that have been published abroad throughout the Western world. That there have been disturbances is quite true, but I do not think they menace the peace of China with the United States, or any other nation.

The feeling against Americans in China does not exceed that entertained toward all other foreigners, and, as I understand the situation, the entire anti-foreign feeling is due in a large measure to the exploitation of business enterprises, which the Chinese feel should be controlled by their own people.

They are willing to refund to foreign investors the money they have spent in the country. In fact, this was done in the case of the Hankow & Canton Railroad.

"Aside from this chief source of anti-foreign feeling, the troubles in China are due to the presence of missionaries, I was assured by a very prominent Chinese that the Chinese people are not all friendly to the presence of foreign missionaries. They resent the efforts of the missionaries to force a lot of new creeds on their people. The Chinese have perhaps a more firmly fixed religious belief than any other people in the world, and they look upon the religions of the Western world with scant favor.

"The Chinese government is as friendly to the people and Government of the United States as toward any other, although nothing has a greater tendency to strain them than the frequent publication of false reports and threatened armed invasions. Although not encouraged by the Government in any way, these reports constitute a grave menace to the continuance of good relations between the Chinese and Americans, for these misleading reports by means of the native press are circulated broadcast throughout the empire, and find ready credence among the masses."

When a Lawyer Won. A Western lawyer says that he was once in a court in Missouri when a young man most fastidiously dressed sauntered into the temple of justice. None of the officials of the court had ever seen him before, and, as the proceedings were unimportant and somewhat tedious, it chanced that the stranger attracted some attention. On his part he eyed the judge narrowly, "sized up" all the attorneys, drummed loudly on the bench in front of him and finally rose and sauntered up to the bar, where he poured out for himself a glass of iced water.
