BEER WITHOUT HOPS UTTERLY IMPOSSIBLE, DECLARES BREWER

Paul Wessinger Says Extinction of Hop Plant Would Be a Public Calamity.

"IT WOULD be nothing less than a public calamity." This is the answer of Paul Wessinger, manager of Weinhard's brewery, to the hypothetical question of what would be the result if all the hops in the world should suddenly be destroyed. The prohibitionists who claim that hops or no hops, beer is beer, and that the brewers and their chemists are possessed of sufficient shrewdness to supply the demand, no matter how great and serious the emergency, are destroyed. Mr. Wessinger, who talks about our manufacturing beer without hops have never been inside of a brewery, continued Mr. Wessinger. "It is really absurd and ridiculous for them to make such foolish statements. If they were acquainted with the inner workings of some of the great breweries they would realize how indispensable hops are to the manufacture of good beer."

"Beer without hops," and then Mr. Wessinger indulged in a healthy laugh. "Of course there could be no such thing as a simultaneous destruction of all the hops unless a miracle were performed—and this is not the age of miracles—or unless the world should come to an end, and then none of us would need worry about the hop crop or the beer production."

"But seriously speaking, I would hate to have drink a glass of beer which had been made without hops. There is nothing that I know of that could possibly take the place of hops, and they are absolutely essential for the manufacture of the beer to which we are accustomed."

Beer Without Hops Not Beer. "Hops impart to beer that smoky and snappy flavor, pleasant and appetizing in its tinge of bitterness. Beer without hops would not be beer; it would be something else. I never heard of any substitutes being used in the place of hops, and I do not believe that there ever will be. There will always be sufficient hops and the brewers will always be able to supply the demand for beer. The more beer consumed the more acres of ground will be planted to hops."

"Take away hops and we wouldn't know how to proceed or what to do. Those who are fond of beer should drink it as an invigorant would most assuredly have to suffer. At least, I think they would. I never heard of any ingredients or chemicals that could take the place of hops. Besides, hops are the best natural preservative known when it comes to making beer."

"How is it that when there is a widespread and general shortage of hops there is always enough beer to supply the demand. The supply of hops equalizes itself from one year to another. Some years there is a superabundance of hops. Then the brewers lay in big supplies to provide against rainy days. For instance, take ourselves. Last year hops were selling very low and

ATTORNEYS HAVE TAINTED MONEY THE THEME OF BRONAUGH AND LOGAN.

Argument in Circuit Court Reveals How Tony Arnaud's Romantic Courtship Was Blighted.

Tainted money was discussed in Judge Sears' court yesterday by John F. Logan, attorney, in arguing against the motion for suit money and attorney's fees in the divorce suit of Rose Arnaud against Tony Arnaud.

Jerry E. Bronaugh appeared as counsel for Mrs. Arnaud and asked for $500 attorney's fees, saying the case would be stubbornly contested. Mr. Arnaud is the keeper of two saloons in the red light district. Mr. Bronaugh called him the proprietor of baglioni. The compelling charges that Arnaud attempted to compel his wife to lead an immoral life.

Mr. Logan asserted that Mrs. Arnaud was an immoral woman, and was attempting to blackmail her husband. Mr. Bronaugh in his response said he was not acquainted with the reputation of the people, and that perhaps Mr. Logan was better informed.

Mr. Logan responded in a speech of considerable length, in which he reminded the court that opposition would be made to the plaintiff's Law and Order League, was a consistent church member and defender of good morals, and while an attorney was generally held to receive his fee, he felt assured Mr. Bronaugh would not accept a fee of money earned in a business such as conducted by the defendant.
