The failure of the second deal to go through brought about in an indirect manner the sensational Wade failure, which disarranged the financial condi-tions of Eastern Oregon three years ago. Wade, having been left alone with the majority of the stock, while booming the mine for future sale, had used money necessary for other debts to bolister up the mine against the day of the sale. He had put 200,000 shares of Red Boy stock at 50 cents into the mine at the time of its purchase, a lot of notes held against the J. E. Smith Livestock Company and some $5000 or $10,000 in cash.
