J. C. Lawrence, a resident member of the railroad commission, tonight said:
"The commission law says the commis sion shall ascertain, as early as is prac-ticable, the amount of money expended in the construction and equipment per mile the construction and equipment per mile of every railway in Washington. For the purpose in this section named the com-mission may employ sworn experts to in-spect and assist them when needed. On the question of salaries the law provides for a secretary at $2000 per annum, three clerks at $1200 each per annum, and such other persons 'as experts' as may be necessary to perform the duties that may be required of them by this act.

The amount of money involved in railroad construction in Washington is probably $150,000,000. Getting at this cost is a big problem. The United States Supreme Court has said that rate making is dependent upon that cost. Certainly it is quite as important from the standpoint of taxation. The commission sought only the best talent to take charge of this work. We consider Mr. Gillette especially work. We consider Mr. Gilette especially well fitted for such duties. He is a New York engineer of national reputation and is the author of text books on the subject of construction cost.

And yet the States of Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota, where similar work is now being carried on, estimate ft will require from one to two years' time and the cost will run up to from $50,000 to $50,000.

"There are plenty of cheap engineers to be had, but the Commission does not want to put a cheap man in charge of this important work. There is too much at stake. It saved me from worse than the tortures of hades, about the year 1900, with itching on my scalp and temples, and afterwards it commenced to break out on my hands. Then it broke out on my limbs.
