Firemen and Police Carry Panic Stricken Lodgers to Open Air, Some Having Narrow Escapes in Climbing From Windows.

Fire in the Uncle Sam Hotel, at the southwest corner of Fifth and Couch streets, early this morning, rendered over 125 persons homeless for Christmas day, and many of them had narrow escapes for their lives. Special Policeman Jack Hosre discovered the flamm, sent in an alarm of fire from box 16, rushed back to the house and assisted many of the inmates to escape.

The patrol wagon arrived on the scene first, and Patrolmen Brothers, Ehmsen, Ellis, Tennant and Gruber Immediately entered the burning building and assisted as many of the terror-stricken inmates to places of safety as they found rushing blindly through

The firemen did heroic work in rescuing the inmates on the top floor. There were some 39 of these, among whom were two women, and all had to be assisted down the ladders. The work of rescuing the inmates occupied the attention of the firemen, and not until they were assured that all had escaped did Chief Campbell and his men turn their attention to the blaze.

Among those rescued by the firemen and pelice were: John Zeigler, J. B. Gottlieb, Jacob Hunter, Frank Allen, Ed Wilde, August Jennsen, Dave Wilson, Gust Person, Harry Davidson, Sam Waftler and Pete Wilson.

All the persons rescued lost all their effects except what few clothes they could grab before making their exit through the windows to the waiting arms of the firemen, or being excerted down the first flight of stairs by the hustling bluecoats. All the men at the scene worked heroically to save the lives of the inmates.

The first man rescued by means of the fire ladders was Pete Wilson, who had thrown a rope from his room on the third floor and climbed down to a level with the second floor, from which position he was taken by the firemen. Sam Waftler, the proprietor, stated that he could not make any estimate on his loss, although he believed that it would reach $4000 or $5000. This does not include the losses of the innates, very few of whom saved anything of more value than an alarm clock. Many were seen carry-ing clocks and arrayed in but scanty at-tire. At the time The Oregonian went to press the flames were under control.

For some time Weyerhaeuser had been buying, trading, and by other means taking over lands in the Northwest. It was in 1906 that a big splurge was made. All of the Northern Pacific land west of the of the Northern Pacific land west of the Cascades, something over 1,030,000 nores, was taken at a flat rate of $8 an acre. According to well-informed men dealing in lumber onthe Coast, there is already a profit of $20,000,000 in that one deal. Weyerhacuser opened headquarters in Tacoma, Washington. Here, as was the case in the Mississippi River district, unostentation was the rule. An office was secured in a quiet little red brick house downtown, overlooking the Sound, and R. L. McCormick, a partner of many years standing, and the man Weyerhacuser trusts probably more than anyone else, was sent to the Coast to handle the business.
