

"Mr. A. M. Baber, Portland, Or.:

"My Dear Mr. Baber: Immediately upon receipt of your letter of the 5th, I called upon the Co-operative Construction Company, located in our city, from which I gained the following data:

"They are now operating three camps; first is located on the main line three miles south of LaPorte, and the others about seven miles apart. At the first camp the company owns a farm of about forty acres, upon which is located a switch track from the Pere Marquette Railroad, which is used for handling supplies. This forty acres is divided into a railway yard where they have tons of rails. They also have a large warehouse building upon this plot of ground, numerous tents and cabins. They are now constructing a powerhouse plant, which will be used for operating the road as fast as it progresses, and taking care of supplies from the city to the main line.

"A personal visit to the camp developed the above facts. They have now about five miles of track laid ready for operation, and the camps are beehives of industry. They have the rolling-stock ordered to operate these five miles of track, which, judging by present indications, will be in full operation in about three weeks. All the material, together with the horses, mules, wagons, etc., are paid for, and this company is not placing any orders for immediate cash.

"The people in LaPorte are taking very kindly to this proposition, so when Marshal Crowe, of Lorane, attempt-ed to arrest the bandit on a charge of burgiary. The bad man was then living in a deserted house, and when the officer called, refused him admittance. The house was then surrounded by a large posse of citizens and during the night the des-perado jumped out of a window and made his get-away. About 100 shots were fired at him, but he seemed to bear a charmed life and escaped unscathed. About two weeks after he returned and started a reign of terror, robbing houses. He was built to take care of the surplus and fruits too ripe for shiftment. Sections that previously did not think they could raise products successfully are also going into the business. I look for a most prosperous season this year and see no reason why it should not continue in the future."
